

D-205
Oyster Creek Farm
Taylor's Island
c. 1840 and later
Private

Dating from the second quarter of the nineteenth century, the Oyster Creek farmhouse is a substantial three-part frame dwelling that has been extensively reworked during the mid to late twentieth century. Renewed siding in beaded edge cedar, combined with reworked cornices, bargeboards, and windows, disguise the true age of the main block and north wing, which do retain some period finishes. The side hall/parlor plan main block survives with its original staircase, which is enhanced with a turned newel post in tiger maple as well as a wave motif stringer decoration that was popular during the period. The door surrounds feature bulls-eye corner blocks, another architectural finish common to the mid nineteenth century.

Chain-of-title research traces the ownership of the farm back to the mid nineteenth century. Documented in the land records as including parts of tracts, "Dover," "Richard's Discovery," or "Pattison's Discovery," the farm bordered "Long Cove," as it was identified in an 1868 transfer between James L. Bryan and William Broome Travers. William B. Travers had purchased the plantation in 1855 from trustee and attorney James Wallace at the significant sum of $6,060. Given the Greek Revival influence of some of the woodwork, it is certain that the extant house was standing on the property when the transfer took place. William Broome Travers owned and occupied the farm for the next decade, and in 1875, following his death, his three daughters, Sophie D. Radcliffe, Mary A. Cator, and Adeline E. Griffith, exchanged properties with Adeline and her husband, Edwin L. Griffith, receiving title to what was then called the Oyster Creek farm.

DESCRIPTION SUMMARY

Oyster Cove farm is located on the north side of Taylor's Island at 4504 Bay Shore Road in Dorchester County, Maryland. The second quarter of the nineteenth century frame house is located at the end of a drive with the house situated facing Oyster Cove, also known as Long Cove in the mid nineteenth century land records. Supported on a renewed brick foundation, the exterior is clad with renewed cedar siding, and the various roofs are covered with asphalt shingles. The house faces west with the gable roof oriented on a north/south axis.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

Oyster Cove farm, comprising 28.5 acres, is located at 4504 Bay Shore Road on the north end of Taylor's Island, Dorchester County, Maryland. The two-story, three-bay side hall/parlor main block, estimated to date around 1840-50, is extended to the north with a story-and-a-half wing, which also dates to the second quarter of the nineteenth century. Attached to the south gable end of the main block is a shorter two-story, two-bay, single-pile addition. Supported on a low brick foundation, the exterior is clad with renewed siding executed in beaded cedar. The exterior trim boards, bargeboards, and cornices have also been renewed, and the windows have all been replaced. The gable roof of the main block is marked by a pair of gable roofed dormers fitted with two-over-two sash windows. An interior end brick stack rises though the south gable end.

The story-and-a-half north wing has been reworked with the addition of shed roofed dormers and enclosed, single-story porches. Rising against the north gable end of the main block and within the story-and-a-half wing is a brick chimney stack finished with a corbelled cap. A similarly detailed cap finishes another chimney stack that rises against the north gable end with its base incorporated into a shed roofed porch. The interior of the main block was not open, but the hall retains a period staircase indicative of the 1840s. A turned newel post, executed in tiger maple along with rectangular balusters, support a circular profile handrail. The stair stringer is finished with a wave pattern decoration, and the area below the stringer is divided into vertical panels. The ceiling is finished with a plastered cornice and a medallion is located in the front portion of the hall inside the doorway.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
Oyster Creek house is composed of two sections. The taller part, two full stories, is a frame building covered with asbestos siding, three bays long. The gable faces south and the back of the fireplace is exposed. It is also flanked by two windows on each floor including the attic which has small windows which have 2/2 sash. The smaller section was four bays wide, originally had two windows and two doors on each side of the building and two dormers on each side of the "A" roof. The Spicers, who bought it in 1947, raised the "A" roof, so it is a two story wing now. On the west facade, which overlooks the cove, the Spicers have put in place of the two windows and door of the main portion of the house, a window in place of the door and a picture window in the place of the other two windows. In the middle room, which is a sitting room, there is also another picture window in place of the door and window. The majority of the interior has been remodeled but there is one original raised panel door between the kitchen and sitting room. Those two rooms are in the earlier portion of the house. The latter portion of the house is composed of a stair hall and parlor. The parlor has been completely remodeled except for the floor and baseboard. The chimney has been reconstructed but the original mantel is still on the farm, it is stored in the barn. The stair is the most handsome and substantial thing of the house. It continues all the way to the attic. It has a paneled wall beneath the stair and where the step ends there are some very fine standrels. The newel post is tiger maple, turned, and the balusters are square. The hand rail is almost round and continues up and over the intervening newel posts. The original trim in this part of the house has corner blocks with circular discs and apparently dates from around the 1830's. The panel molding consists of an applied ogee molding. It looks very similar in profile to the molding around the door which of course is part of the style of the door in the older section. Originally there was a white pine board partition which separated the two rooms in the older section of the house but it was removed when the house was remodeled in the 40's. Another unusual feature of the house is in the hall - there is a plaster medallion in the ceiling and there is a plaster cove and bead cornice which is partially destroyed because of the weather. It stands across Oyster Cove from Mulberry Grove. On the property there is also a five hole frame privy of the early 19th century which came from Mulberry Grove. The privy is of such quality that it should be recorded. There are so few period privies existing in the state of Maryland.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Oyster Creek Farm is important chiefly because of its architecture. It represents the earliest vernacular form of hall and parlor house which was similar in exterior appearance to Makepeace, Somerset County. That is because the facade had two central doors flanked by windows. This building appears to have been constructed almost one hundred years after Makepeace, however, which indicates the persistence of the vernacular tradition, especially in Dorchester County.

It is also a good example of the additive quality of vernacular architecture. The two story section was built at a more affluent time, and the interior shows a gradual move away from the vernacular, toward stylish architecture.

The presence of the early 19th century privy on the property is of great interest since most outbuildings became obsolete and were removed.

In the "Lake Griffing Stevenson Atlas" of 1877 a windmill appears at the head of Oyster Creek on this property under the name of E. L. Griffith.
