Bradshaw Property, (Bucktown Storekeeper's House, Meredith House)

Architectural Survey File

This is the architectural survey file for this MIHP record. The survey file is organized reverse-chronological (that is, with the latest material on top). It contains all MIHP inventory forms, National Register nomination forms, determinations of eligibility (DOE) forms, and accompanying documentation such as photographs and maps.

Users should be aware that additional undigitized material about this property may be found in on-site architectural reports, copies of HABS/HAER or other documentation, drawings, and the “vertical files” at the MHT Library in Crownsville. The vertical files may include newspaper clippings, field notes, draft versions of forms and architectural reports, photographs, maps, and drawings. Researchers who need a thorough understanding of this property should plan to visit the MHT Library as part of their research project; look at the MHT web site (mht.maryland.gov) for details about how to make an appointment.

All material is property of the Maryland Historical Trust.

The Meredith House (D-744) is a two-story residence located on the east side of Bestpitch Ferry Road, at the intersection of Bestpitch Ferry and Bucktown Roads. The building faces west and is set close to the road. The Bucktown Village Store (D-80) is located on the parcel adjacent to the north of the residence, and the Lewis House (D-81) is on the parcel south of the property. The Meredith House has undergone several modifications since it was constructed in 1890, but the current owner indicated that it possibly dates to the early nineteenth century; however, this information could not be verified during research. It is a common vernacular form of side-gable house architecture found on the Eastern Shore. The core of the building is two bays wide by one room deep, with a two-story, two-bay-wide ell projection off of the east elevation.

The main entrance is located on the northwest side of the façade. It is reached by a brick landing. A transom light is featured above the entrance. Full-width, first-story, shed-roof porches that are now enclosed are located on both the north and south elevations. An entrance door is located on the façade of the north porch enclosure. A two-story, perpendicular ell extends from the rear (east) elevation. The projections of the ell and the modified porches form an irregular footprint.

Composite siding sheaths the building. Fenestration is comprised of a variety of configurations that are irregularly spaced in some sections. On the main core of the building, storm windows are installed over the original, six-over-six, double-hung sash windows, which are flanked by jalousie shutters. Louvered and one-over-one, double-hung sash windows are located on the enclosed porches. Asphalt shingles clad the primary roof and porch roofs. The raked eaves have a slight overhang and gable returns accentuate the cornice. Attic vents are located in the gables. An interior, brick chimney stack is located on the ridge at the south end of the roof. A television antenna is mounted adjacent to the chimney stack. The cross gable roof contains an interior, brick chimney on the ridge as well. Brick corbelling caps the tops of the chimneys.

Foundation plantings consist of evergreen shrubs which flank the main entrance. A variety of mature, deciduous trees surround the residence.

Significance

General Project Area Description

Bucktown, Maryland, is located in Dorchester County, approximately ten miles south of Cambridge. Bucktown is primarily an agricultural area that is adjacent to the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge. The terrain is relatively flat with the large majority of land used for agricultural purposes. The project area directly abuts the Little Blackwater River on the west, and much of the terrain is marshland in this area. The project area has a low level of elevation, approximately 5 feet above sea level.

Primary crops grown in Bucktown include corn and soybeans. Large industrial poultry houses of recent dates of construction are also present on several farms. Portions of the project area adjacent to the Blackwater Wildlife Refuge have a substantial tree canopy flanking the roadways.

History of Bucktown

Bucktown was formed from the land holdings of Bartholomew Ennalls. A native of York County, Virginia, Ennalls owned thousands of acres of land in southern Maryland in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries. Virtually no scholarly information exists on the establishment or development of Bucktown. It is largely ignored in scholarly histories of Dorchester County, and few primary or secondary resources relating to the town are available. A detailed review of maps of Dorchester County indicates that the name Bucktown first appears on maps in the late eighteenth century.

It is described as “five miles from a railroad station. A fertile farming country surrounds it . . . . about forty people in ten or twelve dwellings measure the size of the quiet town where the ring of the hammer on the blacksmith’s anvil is no more heard. No town growth.”

Tobacco was the primary crop cultivated in the area. It was exported to England for sale, and provided a certain degree of wealth to many of the tobacco plantation owners. After the onset of the Revolutionary War, when trade with England was suspended, corn, wheat, and rye plantings replaced tobacco as the most prominent agricultural crops. Livestock were also raised in larger numbers. The crops and animals were used for both home consumption and to supply the army. These crops remained the primary products planted until after the Civil War. After that time, grain crops became less common.

Bucktown is perhaps best known for its association with Harriet Tubman, a slave who was a critical figure in the Underground Railroad. Because Tubman was born into slavery, very little precise information about her early life is available. Consequently, much misinformation about Tubman has been disseminated throughout time. Reliable sources indicate that she was born circa 820, possibly in or near Bucktown.

She spent her earliest years at the Brodess plantation, which was located just outside of Bucktown. Later, she moved with her owner to other locations within a ten-mile radius of Bucktown. Local tradition states that Tubman may have received a severe head wound that afflicted her for the rest of her life at the Bucktown Store in the 1830s. However, the present Bucktown store was not constructed until circa 1870, according to Dorchester County tax records, so the extant store could not have been the site of the encounter. Her family worshipped at Bazel's Chapel. The original building associated with Tubman’s family burned and the present chapel was constructed circa 1911.

Tubman gained her freedom in 1849, when she escaped to Philadelphia. She eventually settled in Auburn, New York, where she established a home for elderly former slaves. Three buildings in Auburn with associations to Tubman have been designated National Historic Landmarks by the Secretary of the Interior. These include her own residence, the Harriet Tubman House, and the Harriet Tubman Home for the Aged. The church where she worshiped in Auburn, Thompson AME Zion Church is also designated.

Historic Resources in Bucktown

Relatively few built resources are present within the Bucktown vicinity. This is due to the prevalence of large swaths of agricultural land in cultivation. The majority of buildings in Bucktown are residences. Almost all of the buildings more than 50 years of age are farmhouses from the late nineteenth or early twentieth centuries. Most of the residences retain their basic forms, which include I-houses and smaller cottages. Many of the residences have side or rear additions. Most have been re-sided in either aluminum siding or asbestos shingles. Replacement windows and enclosed porches are other common alterations. The conditions of the residences range from excellent to poor, with several near collapse.

Few historic agricultural buildings associated with the farmhouses remain (although several of the properties were inaccessible and only farmhouses were visible from the right-of-way). New agricultural buildings consist primarily of large-scale poultry houses sheathed in metal.

An abundance of houses dating from the late 1950s through the present are found in Bucktown. Most are modest, single-story houses with minimal architectural detail. These newer houses are located on small plots of land in linear patterns, unlike the houses of earlier eras, which were located on large plots of farmland.

Several modest frame chapels are located in the vicinity of Bucktown. They are associated with African-American congregations in the area.

The Bucktown Store is the sole resource associated with commerce in the area. As with other general stores in small towns, it likely served the town with basic supplies. However, Bucktown’s proximity to Cambridge allowed for a reasonable commute into the larger city for commercial goods.

The historic and cultural landscape within Bucktown conveys the historic agricultural use of the land. Although historic crops in Dorchester County included tobacco and grains and not the currently omnipresent soybeans, the land has remained cleared and used for agricultural purposes. Other components of the landscape are used as part of the Blackwater Wildlife Refuge and appear to be in their pristine natural condition. Substantial sections of the region, most notably in the area surrounding the wildlife refuge, are covered with thick stands of tall trees.
Determination of Eligibility

The quality of significance in American history, architecture, archeology, engineering, and culture is present in districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects that possess integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association, and:

A. that are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history; or

B. that are associated with the lives of significant persons in our past; or

C. that embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or that represent the work of a master, or that possess high artistic values, or that represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; or

D. that have yielded or may be likely to yield, information important in history or prehistory.

The residence at the intersection of Bestpitch Ferry and Bucktown Roads is not eligible for the National Register of Historic Places. It is not associated with significant events that contributed to the history of Bucktown and is not eligible under Criterion A. No significant people appear to be associated with the property; therefore the property is not eligible under Criterion B. The residence is a typical example of a late-nineteenth century, vernacular house in Bucktown. The property owner indicated that the house is possibly older than its 1890 construction date that was uncovered during the course of research. However, this earlier date could not be verified, although this form was seen in the area before 1890. The building has had at least three additions since it was constructed. The property has suffered a loss of integrity of materials, design, association, and feeling. The building’s integrity has been compromised by the installation of incompatible replacement windows and replacement doors, and the house has been clad in composite siding. The porches on the north and south elevations have been altered; they have been fully enclosed and modern windows have been installed. Therefore, the residence no longer conveys its original appearance and design. Other similar buildings with high degrees of integrity exist on the Eastern Shore, including the Fred Doege Farm (D-86). Consequently, it is not eligible under Criterion C. The property was not evaluated under Criterion D.

The Bucktown Storekeeper’s house is a two-part frame dwelling built in two distinct stages between 1840 and 1880. Historically tied to the Bucktown store (D-80), this dwelling has been used in conjunction with the store as a storekeeper’s residence, or it has been rented or leased to a separate individual. The rear single-story, two-room plan frame dwelling, estimated to date around 1840, is visually evident with its original gable roofed profile surviving on the east elevation. The single story structure was later raised to a two-story height. The front two-story, side hall/parlor section clearly dates to the last decades of the nineteenth century with its Victorian interior finishes. A double wall thickness inside between the living room and dining room is indicative of this building history where the rear wing was initially an independent dwelling. Most likely, the rear wing was turned and repositioned on the site farther back from the road to allow for the construction of the two-story section around 1880. This house, along with the Bucktown store and the Clement Sterling house (D-81) next door are the only nineteenth century buildings surviving as tangible evidence of this once busy crossroads village.

The Bucktown house and store is traceable through the land records back to the mid nineteenth century with the construction of the older section attributable to John Mills or John Bradshaw, who owned the property between the mid 1830s and the early 1870s. John Mills was a prominent land owner in the Bucktown district; he surfaces in the settlement of Edward Brodess’s estate as a co-administrator in 1849. In August 1853 he sold the land on the east side of the Bucktown crossroads, along with other acreage, to John Bradshaw for $4,500. John Bradshaw, and his son, William Eugene Sulivane Bradshaw, held title to the crossroads property for nearly twenty years afterwards.

The fourth quarter of the nineteenth century history of the store property involves Thomas M. Meredith, who was one of the largest land holders in the Bucktown district. He is most likely responsible for reworking the single-story house with the two-story side hall/parlor plan addition around 1880. After Thomas M. Meredith’s death the property remained in the hands of Joseph B. Meredith, who owned it jointly with Elizabeth W. LeCompte. The joint owners sold the house and lot to Clarence M. Smith in May 1892.

During the early twentieth century, the store and house were occupied by William T. Nabb, and a few decades later the house was the residence of a Howard Asplen, whereas M. Bonaparte Carey conducted the store operation next door. Through the years between the mid 1920s and the mid 1960s, the store and house were owned by B. Harrisoni Bramble and his wife Myrtle E. Bramble.

DESCRIPTION SUMMARY

The Bucktown Storekeeper’s House, known by various names such as the Bradshaw Property during the mid nineteenth century, or the Howard Asplen house during the early twentieth century, is a two-part frame dwelling that dates from two distinct periods; the main or front block was erected around 1880-90, whereas the rear section dates to the second quarter of the nineteenth century, and it was later modified with shed additions and a raising of the roof to expand the first and second floor space. The house stands next to the Bucktown Store (D-80) and it has been associated with it since the mid nineteenth century. Supported on a low brick foundation, the exterior is clad with vinyl siding, and the various gable roofs are covered with asphalt shingles. The house faces west with the principal gable roof oriented on a north/south axis. The first floor interiors retain portions of its original woodwork. The front section has a turned baluster staircase characteristic of 1880s and 1890s. The rear section has an enclosed or boxed staircase that rises between the two rooms. A flat six-panel door is located on the inside partition, however, it may have been reused from the Clement Waters house. (D-81)

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

The Bucktown Shorekeeper’s House stands at 4303 Bucktown Road at the Bucktown crossroads next to the Bucktown Store (D-80). Centrally located in the Bucktown Election District of Dorchester County, the two-story, two-bay main block, dating around 1880-90, fronts a single-story, two-room plan frame dwelling that dates to the second quarter of the nineteenth century. Supported on a low masonry foundation, the exterior is sheathed with vinyl siding and the gable roofs are covered with asphalt shingles. The single-story rear wing has been raised to a higher elevation and it has been extended on each side with shed roofed additions.

The west (main) façade of the 1880-90 house is a two-bay elevation with a side entrance and flanking six-over-six sash window. The entrance has a partially glazed front door and a two-light transom. The second floor is marked by a pair of six-over-six sash windows. Trimming the base of the roof is a boxed cornice. The north side of the front block is covered on the first floor by a single-story shed roofed addition, and a single off-center six-over-six sash window lights the second floor. There is a small vent in the gable end. The edge of the roof is extended slightly with returns at the base. The south gable end is marked by off-center six-over-six sash windows. A single flue brick stove chimney protrudes through the gable end.

The rear wall of the main block is largely covered by the single-story rear wing, which has been raised to a two-story height. The outline of the original single-story house is clearly evident on the east (rear) wall. The rear wing is lighted by six-over-six sash windows, and an interior, centrally placed brick stove chimney pierces the roofline.
The first floor interior has retained elements of nineteenth century finishes. The front hall has been incorporated into the living room with the removal of the hall partition. A turned baluster staircase with a turned newel post topped by a ball finial is the principal focus of the front section. Indicative of the two periods of construction is an extra wide inside wall thickness between the front living room and dining room. The dining room has a Victorian mantel fixed in the middle partition, which is also the location of an enclosed staircase. A flat six-panel Federal door, possibly reused, is located on the door frame between the dining room and kitchen.
