

The Buckeystown Cannery House is a two and one-half story frame cross gabled Carpenter Gothic residence. The principal facade is five bays wide. The main entrance, a replaced half pane, half paneled door is located in the third bay on the first level. Occupying the remaining bays on the first level and all bays on the second level are 6/6 windows with architraved wood lintels and louvered shutters. A segmented arched window is centered in the front gable of the building. A frame one story porch added in the 1920's extends across the front of the building on the first level.

The Buckeystown Cannery House was built circa 1893 after Otho Keller sold the property to the Buckeystown Packing Company in 1892. The house was the residence of David "Arch" Mossburg, manager of the canning operation. It is a typical regional style house.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Buckeystown Cannery House is a two and one-half story frame cross gabled Carpenter Gothic residence which faces east from the north side of Manor Woods Road.

The principal facade is five bays wide. The main entrance, a replaced half pane, half paneled door is located in the third bay on the first level. Occupying the remaining bays on the first level and all bays on the second level are 6/6 windows with architraved wood lintels and louvered shutters. A segmented arched window is centered in the front gable of the building.

A frame one story porch added in the 1920's extends across the front of the building on the first level.

The main front block of the building is two bays deep. A two story addition extends to the southwest rear of the building. The rear addition is three bays long and two bays deep. A side entrance to the building is located in the third bay from the southwest corner of the addition. The entrance is a replaced half paned and half paneled door. The remaining bays are occupied by 6/6 windows with wood lintels identical to those on the main block of the building.

Covering the side entrance is a one bay wide entrance porch with standing seam tin roof, plain boxed cornice supported by turned columns.

Extending to the north side from the rear addition is a two story open porch with boxed columns and simple railing. The rear part of the porches have been enclosed in frame on both levels to accommodate bathrooms.

The entire building is constructed on a low random limestone foundation which has been sheathed in cement. The building is covered with German siding with corner boards. The gently sloping cross gable slate roof is attached by a plain boxed cornice with return.

Three corbeled brick chimneys rise from the north, south, and west ends of the building.
