

F-1-128
James Doll House
Greenfield
Private

Circa 1858-1860

The Doll House is significant as one of the few remaining structures which in the mid nineteenth century were part of a thriving milling community known as Greenfield Mills.

The Greenfield Mills were operating by 1831 under the ownership of Isaac McPherson. By 1836, a post office had been established. However, the settlement did not gain a large population until around 1860 after Meredith Davis sold the Mills and other personal property to settle his debts.

In 1858 when the trustees of Meredith Davis sold his property, James Hamner purchased the land upon which the Doll House is now located. He only held onto the land for two years selling it to Joshua Doll for $4000.00 in 1860.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

James Doll House

This house is a two story ell shaped brick and frame house with gable roof which faces north from the south side of Greenfield Mills Road in the now mostly uninhabited community of Greenfield Mills.

The principal facade is three bays wide. An original four panel door with narrow three light transom is located in the second bay. Occupying the remaining bays on the first and second levels are double hung 6/6 windows, many of which contain the original glass panes. A porch once extended across the front of the building on the first level. The main block of the building is two bays deep.

A two story frame addition extends to the rear of the main block of the building. The rear addition of the building is three bays deep. A rear entrance occupies the second bay on the first level. Double hung 6/6 windows occupy or once occupied the remaining bays on the first and second levels. A small one story porch supported by turned columns extends between the main block and rear addition of the house.

The entire house is built on a low random stone foundation and is constructed of brick laid in common bond and stuccoed. The front elevation has been covered with German siding.

Three single interior chimneys rise from the house on the east, west, and south gable ends.

The building is covered by a standing seam tin roof with cast iron snow birds attached by a plain boxed cornice.

The floor of the building was missing, making it impossible to make an interior inspection except for the rear kitchen area of the building.

Several frame outbuildings are located to the rear of the house in disrepair.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Doll House is significant as one of the few remaining structures which in the mid nineteenth century were part of a thriving milling community known as Greenfield Mills.

The Greenfield Mills were operating by 1831 under the ownership of Isaac McPherson. By 1836, a post office had been established. However, the settlement did not gain a large population until around 1860 after Meredith Davis sold the Mills and other personal property to settle his debts. In the Business Directory of the Titus Atlas in 1873, James Roberts is indicated as the miller and James Beall a dry goods merchant in the community.

In 1858 when the trustees of Meredith Davis sold his property, James Hamner purchased the land upon which the Doll House is now located.¹ He only held onto the land for two years selling it to Joshua Doll for $4000.00 in 1860.²

The house was owned by the Doll family until 1874 when it was purchased by James Beall who owned it until he died and it was sold in 1903.³ Subsequently two owners had the land before its current owner, the Wilcox family.
