

Buckeystown United Methodist Church
Buckeystown
Private

According to Williams, History of Frederick County, the existing stone Methodist Church built in 1895 replaced a brick church built in 1867.

The church, built at the cost of $16,000, was built on land donated by Charles F. Thomas and the building is believed to have been constructed under his guidance and that of his brother, William G. Baker.

The Methodist Church, situated on top of a hill in the south part of Buckeystown, has been a focal point of the community since its construction being used for suppers, meetings, and a polling place.

The church is a one and one-half story quarried stone building of worship with one story cinder block. The building displays a mix of Romanesque Revival and Queen Anne architectural elements. The most imposing feature of the building is the square belfry which rises from the north center of the building facade. The entire building is constructed of fine coursed quarried ashlar cut stone.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Buckeystown Methodist Protestant Church is a one and one-half story quarried stone building of worship with one story cinder block rear addition and unusual two story stone belfry with five pointed spire.

The building displays a mix of Romanesque Revival and Queen Anne architectural elements. The most imposing feature of the building is the square belfry which rises from the north center of the building facade. The entire building is constructed of fine coursed quarried ashlar cut stone.

The main entrance, twin five panel doors with dentiled cornice and stained glass transom is centered in the east side of the belfry and is covered by a pedimented frame entrance porch supported by eight ionic columns with smooth shafts.

Located in the center of the gable is a garland decoration with the building date "1896" in raised letters. Frame Palladian arches with dentiled lower cornice and keystone molding are supported by plain columns. Two small circular openings are located in each corner of the archways on the second level of the belfry.

This circular motif is duplicated on the frieze under the plain boxed cornice which supports the roof.

A main hexagonal spire rises approximately two stories high from the center of the belfry and is flanked on all four corners by one story high pyramidal slate towers with paneled frame bases and finials. The large cast iron swinging bell remains intact in the belfry tower behind the Palladian openings.

The main building is divided into two sections by the belfry. The main chancel on the south end of the building is four bays wide with alcoves, one bay wide extending in the southeast and southwest directions. Triple Romanesque arched stained glass windows with relieving round stone arches occupy the first three bays on the principal facade of the building.

A small narrow 1/1 window is located in the fourth bay close to the belfry tower. Located in the center of the southeast wall of the extending stone alcove is a circular stained glass window surrounded by segmented stone. A plain entrance is located on the north side of the alcove.

The entire main chancel is covered by a gently sloping pentagonal roof with eyelit gable vents located in alternate panels of the roof. A decorative brass religious symbol acts as a finial on top of the roof.

DESCRIPTION

Buckeystown United Methodist Church

The north section of the building is arched shape, three bays wide on the east and west sides with a three bayed area on the north side. The original 1/1 windows which occupied each of these bays in 1900 when the church was built have been replaced by double hung 12/12 windows. An irregular shaped slate hip roof covers this section of the building. Eyelid gable vents extend from each roof panel over the north section of the building.

The interior of the building has had only minor alterations since constructed in 1896. The pews, wood paneled vaulted ceiling, altar area and fine wainscoted Sunday school room remain the same.
