Shookstown Public School No. 2
Frederick vicinity
Private

1881

The Shookstown Public School No. 2 is a one-story frame building erected as a one-room schoolhouse in 1881 and converted to residential use in 1930 after the school was closed. It has a two-bay east elevation with a painted-over sign panel in the gable peak and a one-story porch added after 1930. The north and south elevations had three bays originally, and a polygonal bay window was added to the south elevation in the 1940's. Several shed additions were built on the west elevation to provide a kitchen and later a bathroom for the former school, which also has interior partition walls added after 1930. The interior walls reveal the locations of two of the original blackboards where the covering wallpaper has cracked slightly. The Shookstown School is a fair example of the one-room rural schoolhouse of the late 19th century. Many of its contemporary schools were consolidated in the 1930's and the buildings sold and converted to other uses, usually residential. Most have the same alterations exemplified in the Shookstown School, the rear additions for kitchens and bathrooms, interior partitions, and porches.

The Shookstown Public School No. 2 is a one-story frame building built in 1881 and converted to a residence in 1930, with both interior and exterior alterations in the 1930's and in the 1980's. The former school is located on the northwest side of Old Receiver Road about 75 yards north of the intersection of Shookstown Road near Frederick (City), Frederick County, Maryland. The building faces southeast and is set back from Old Receiver Road about 100 feet. The date of construction is inscribed on a board retained in the house and verified by land records.

The originally one-room school was built with german siding and a gable roof probably covered with wood shingles, which has been covered with standing seam metal. The east gable end has two bays with a sign panel in the gable peak, which is now painted over. The two bays may have both been entrances originally; however, Mrs. Pearl Stup, a Shookstown resident who was a teacher in the building in about 1923, recalls only one entrance door in the main elevation by the early 1920's. The door is paneled, with a glazed upper section. The windows are 3/1, probably replacements in the 1930's of the original sash, which may have been the commonly used 2/2 sash of the 1880's. The cornice is boxed and a one-story porch added after the conversion to residential use extends across the east elevation and part of the south elevation. The porch has turned columns. Mrs. Stup remembers a bell cupola over the east gable end, which has since been removed, leaving no indication in the current roofing material. The house currently has two chimneys with corbeled tops, one located in the center and the other on the west gable end. The north and south elevations originally had three bays. A polygonal bay window was added to the south elevation in about the 1940's, according to the current owner, Mrs. Masser. On the west elevation are a succession of shed additions made after 1930 which contained a kitchen and, later, a bathroom. The interior of the house has been partitioned for residential use and modern wall-to-wall carpeting, wallpaper, and paint cover the interior surfaces. In two sections of the outer wall, slight cracking of the wallpaper and painted surface reveal the locations of two of the original blackboards still in place. These were not slate, according to Mrs. Stup and Mrs. Masser, but are black-painted wood boards.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Shookstown Public School No. 2 is a fair example of the late 19th century rural one-room schoolhouse in Frederick County. Its original functional architectural form is still discernible although modern alterations have taken place. The identifying sign panel is another important element in its integrity. During the 1930's, many of the small rural schools were consolidated into larger schools and the unused buildings were sold by the County Board of Education. Most were converted to residential use and the alterations which characterized the change are present in the Shookstown Public School: removal of the cupola, partition walls on the interior, additions for kitchen and bathrooms, and porches. In the later 20th century, windows and doors were usually replaced. The schoolhouse was a symbol of community organization and civic responsibility in rural villages and were often used for meetings and pageants as well as educational purposes. The Shookstown School was the result of such local self-improvement initiatives, as exemplified by an inscribed board found in the structure and retained by the current owners, which reads: "This building was erected only thru the indomitable energy of Mr. Frederick T_____ (last name illegible), August 17, 1881." The pencil inscription was probably made by the builder, undoubtedly Mr. T_____ himself.
