Wolf/Sears Catalog House
Wolfsville vicinity
Private

Ca. 1912

The Wolf/Sears Catalog House is a circa 1912 1-1/2 story frame house built with pre-cut materials and design provided through the Sears, Roebuck and Company catalog. It has a gambrel roof with cross ridges adorned with metal cresting and patterned slate, leaded transoms above 1/1 sash, polygonal bay windows, german siding, and a one-story porch with Composite order capitals. The house replaces an earlier log dwelling on the Wolf farmstead, established in the mid-19th century. The other buildings are a circa 1850-75 frame bank barn and several chicken houses dating from the first quarter of the 20th century. The house is principally significant for its integrity; it retains most of its original plan and materials intact. The porch has been extended, joining the originally two sections of porch on the south and east elevations, and the kitchen has been remodeled. A pass-through opening to the dining room has been closed off, but the columned arch at the entrance to the parlor and the paneled staircase and doors are original. The Sears design is No. 113, which appeared in the catalogs for 1911-1913.

The Wolf/Sears Catalog House is a circa 1912 Sears, Roebuck & Company catalog house, Design No. 113, with 1-1/2 stories, a gambrel roof with metal cresting on the side gables, a second story bay window with a leaded glass transom, and a one-story porch which extends across two elevations. The house replaced an earlier dwelling on a farmstead established in the early to mid 19th century located on the north side of Garfield Road just west of Pleasant Valley Road in the vicinity of Wolfsville, Frederick County, Maryland. The farmstead's other buildings include a frame bank barn of the third quarter of the 19th century, a frame, two-section chicken house of the first quarter of the 20th century, several frame chicken houses in a group located west of the dwelling, and a non-contributing concrete block garage.

The house has german siding and the roof is patterned slate on the sides of the cross gables and standing seam metal overall. The porch, as shown in the attached copy from Stevenson and Jandl's Houses by Mail, was originally two separate sections which were joined by a corner extension prior to 1950. The porch columns are Composite order. The window surrounds are molded and the leaded glass transoms also appear in the east elevation windows grouped as three on the first story. The sash is 1/1. The north elevation has an enclosed shed porch with german siding, probably added soon after the house was built. The enclosure was built after 1950. The interior plan of the house closely matches the original design. A pass-through opening between the kitchen and the dining room was closed off and the kitchen has been remodeled. The original oak and chestnut paneling of the staircase and the columned arch between the parlor and the reception hall are as built, and most trim and doors on the second level are also original.

Outbuildings:

Barn: The frame bank barn predates the house, having been built about the third quarter of the 19th century. It has a standing seam roof and vertical siding. The stall level on the east elevation is enclosed with flush wood boards. A wagon shed was built on the south gable end of the barn in the late 19th or early 20th century.

Two-section chicken house: This is a one-story frame building located north of the barn. It has two opposing, shed-roofed sections with the higher roof of the northern part forming a sort of clerestory with windows facing south. The exterior is covered with vertical siding and the roof on both sections is standing seam metal. A single 6/6 window is located in the east elevation and the vertical board door is at the northeast corner. The chicken house probably dates from about 1910-1925.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

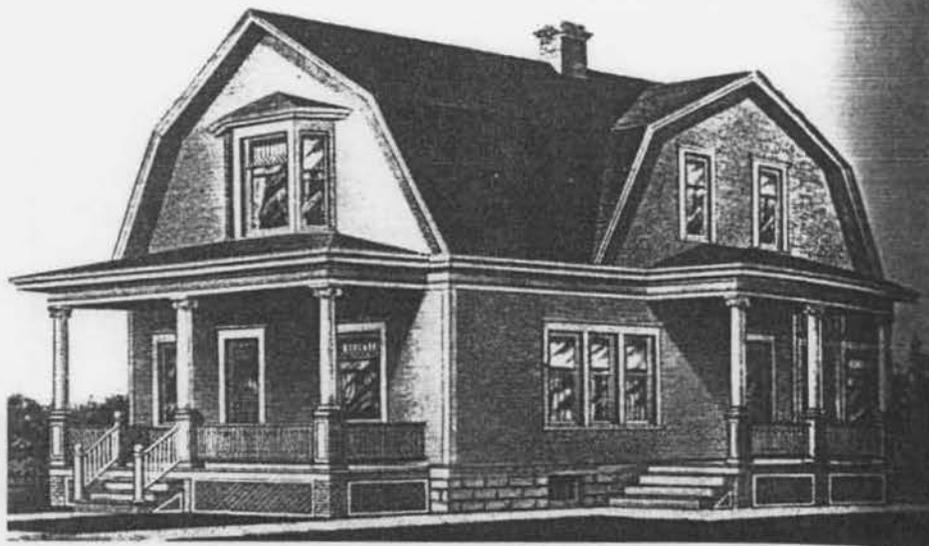

The Wolf/Sears Catalog House is principally significant as an excellent, little-altered example of the catalog houses provided by the Sears, Roebuck and Company from 1908 to 1940. Design No. 113 was built possibly by Henry Lee Wolf about 1912 to replace an earlier log dwelling on the Wolf farmstead, which had been established in the mid-19th century. The design appeared in the catalogs dated 1911 through 1913. The Wolf house is exceptionally intact, retaining most interior features and trim and even has the original claw-foot tub installed when the house was finished. Although many Sears houses exist in Frederick County, a complete inventory has not been accomplished. Currently, the only other Sears house yet inventoried is the H.T. Beans House (F-2-81) in Brunswick, an early 1940's house probably built according to the design called the "Maplewood" which appeared in the 1932-33 catalogs. Many examples are located in the southern part of the Middletown Valley, where proximity to the electric railway and the B&O Railroad lines made delivery of the pre-cut materials for the catalog houses convenient and economical. The closeness of the Wolf farm to Smithsburg in Washington County, on the Western Maryland Railroad line, makes it likely that the materials were delivered to that point and brought by wagon to the site.

Grouped chicken houses: In a pasture west of the dwelling is a line of approximately 6 frame chicken houses which may also date from the first quarter of the 20th century. They have vertical siding and most have shed standing seam roofs.

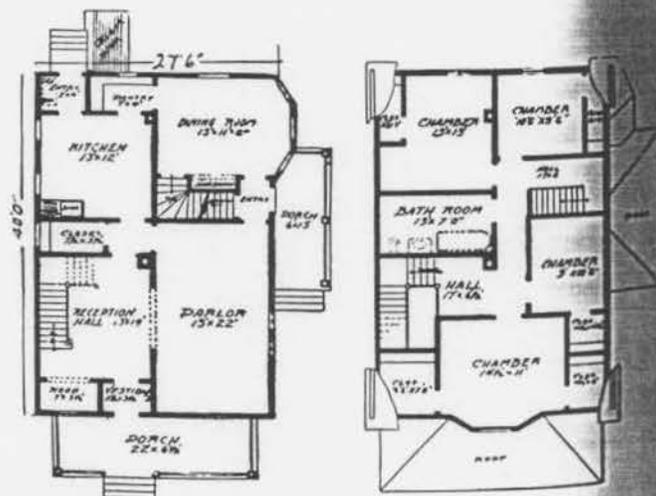

A modern house with a gambrel roof, large front porch and side porch. The side entrance makes it very convenient for a city or suburban residence or country home. The side porch could be very easily arranged to open up to a driveway which might be made directly at the side of the house. The rooms are very conveniently arranged.

Details and features: Seven rooms and one bath. Full-width front porch with hipped roof supported by columns; side porch; bay window in front gable. Nook off hall; pantry off dining room; open stairs.
