Jacob Harbaugh Farm

Sabillasville, Maryland

Private

The Jacob Harbaugh Farm (or Har-Valley Dairy Farm) contains a 2 story log and frame dwelling sheathed in asphalt shingling. The farm exemplifies an agricultural complex dating from the mid-nineteenth century in the Harbaugh Valley region of Frederick County. The dwelling house in the complex demonstrates the expansion of a single pen log house with a later frame section. The end chimney became the central chimney for the building. The farm functioned as an agricultural complex located close to town, its original agricultural usage has continued to present day with dairy operations.

Jacob Harbaugh Farm
Har-Valley Dairy Farm (common name)
Frederick County

F-6-53

7.1 Description

The Jacob Harbaugh Farm (or Har-Valley Dairy Farm) contains a 2 story log and frame dwelling sheathed in asphalt shingling located on the Harbaugh Valley Road approximately 1/4 miles from Sabillasville, Maryland. The principal elevation faces west and is 4 bays wide. The property consists of 12 domestic and agricultural outbuildings that date from the farm's origins in the nineteenth century.

The house rests on a raised stone foundation that banks into a hill on the east. It contains a side gable roof of standing seam tin with two brick chimneys, one off-center and one interior end. The house was constructed in two sections: the off-center chimney marks the division. The section closest to the north is of log; the other 3 bay section is frame. The west facade consists of a center entrance with an elaborate design that includes 10 sidelights on each side, a 4 light transom and a sunburst pattern beneath the transom. Fenestration on all elevations is 9/6 light double hung sash windows with symmetrical placement. The facade has an open porch with a hipped roof and chamfered columns that covers the raised basement level and the first floor. The basement level of the porch is enclosed with widely spaced vertical boards.

The north and south elevations are both 2 bays in width and contain two 4/2 attic windows along with two 9/6 windows. The east elevation has a one story porch with a standing seam tin shed roof and replaced columns. The center bay contains the same elaborate entrance surrounded with parallel placement to the main facade entrance.

Outbuildings on the property include an icehouse which is now being utilized as a feed shed, a smokehouse with tongue and groove siding and a formstone milking house which are situated close to one another several feet to the southwest of the house. Larger agricultural buildings including a bank barn converted to a dairy barn in the 1940s with an attached dairy shed, a brick, stone and frame grainery, a chicken coop replaced with cinderblock and a corncrib are located directly west of the house.

8.1 Significance

The Jacob Harbaugh Farm exemplifies an agricultural complex dating from the mid-nineteenth century in the Harbaugh Valley region of Frederick County. The dwelling house in the complex demonstrates the expansion of a single pen log house with a later frame section. The end chimney became the central chimney for the building. The farm functioned as an agricultural complex located close to town; its original agricultural usage has continued to present day with dairy operations.

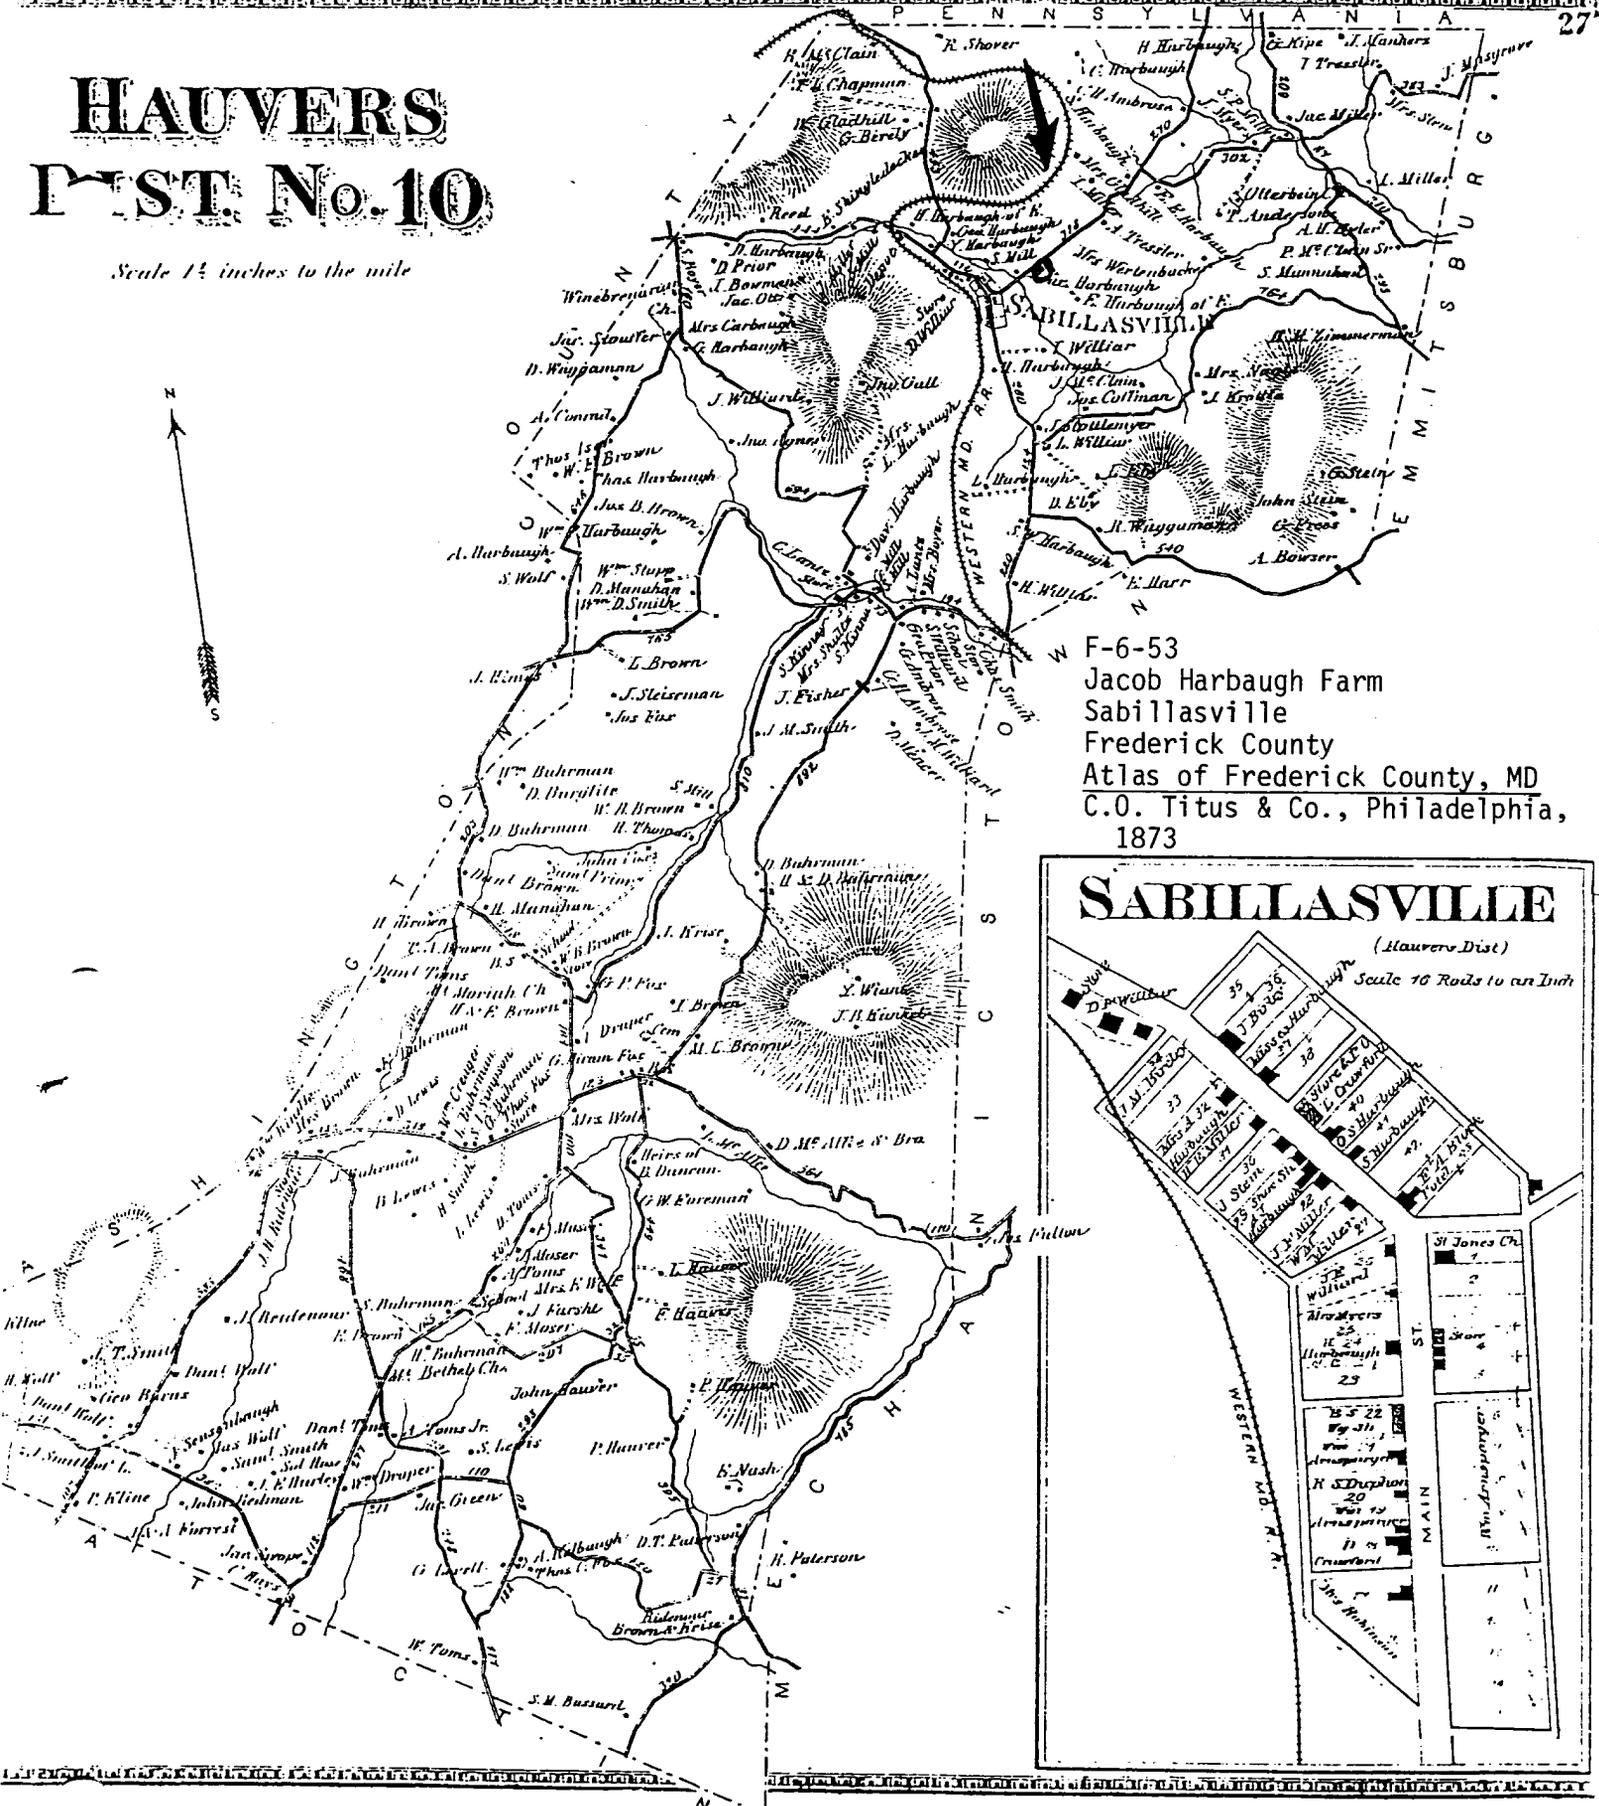

Considered within its historic context, the Jacob Harbaugh House represents a log and frame building which has not been compromised by later additions and alterations. It retains most of its original features including 9/6 light windows and elaborate entrances. Although a number of other log and frame dwellings still exist in the region, not many can compare to this house in integrity. Those that do compare lack the architectural details like the doors and windows which indicate an achieved level of prosperity.

The area known as Harbaugh's Valley was originally a Swiss settlement. One of the first settlers was George Harbaugh, a Swiss, who entered the region from Pennsylvania. The Swiss were probably attracted to the familiar landscape of the mountains. The Harbaughs, as a family, grew and prospered, and many Harbaughs still reside in the area to present day. The Jacob Harbaugh Farm was probably constructed by 1830. Jacob Harbaugh owned the property by 1858 and resided there through 1873.

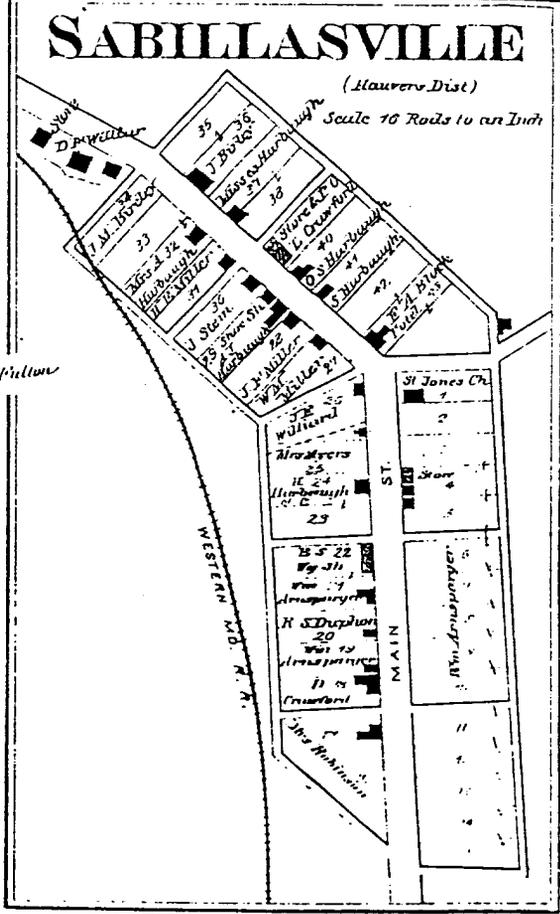

In type, the Jacob Harbaugh House conforms to a typical vernacular house form of the area, a 2 story log and frame building with a center connecting chimney. At the time of the house's expansion with the frame section, however, a more grandiose version of the house form was executed. The fanciful sunburst design above the doors and the 9/6 light windows indicate that the owner was able to afford greater expense than normally seen with additions. The new frame section was constructed with attention to detail and symmetry and became the larger section of the house (3 bays wide).
