Wolfe's Tavern

Thurmont vicinity, Maryland

Private

Wolfe's Tavern is a two story building facing west with a principal gable running north to south. Agricultural outbuildings include a bank barn, a chicken coop and two concrete block sheds located to the north of the house. Wolfe's Tavern is significant in representing a late eighteenth-early nineteenth century commercial building in the region. In type and location, it reflects the importance of taverns and hotels in burgeoning settlements. Architecturally, it survives as one of the earliest buildings constructed in the region. It shows the popularity of log as a construction material from the beginnings of settlement.

7.1 Description

Wolfe's Tavern is located at the intersection of Foxville-Deerfield Road and Manahan Road in the vicinity of Thurmont, Maryland. The two story building faces west with a principal gable running north to south. Agricultural outbuildings include a bank barn, a chicken coop and two concrete block sheds located to the north of the house.

Dwelling House/Tavern: Dating from circa 1800, the 2 story log and frame building sheathed in german siding is 6 bays wide and rests on a concrete foundation. There is an off-center brick chimney on the gable roof of standing seam tin. The principal (west) elevation has 2/2 windows and two arts and crafts oak doors spaced next to the central window. All openings are segmentally arched. A 2 story shed-roofed porch predominates the facade with paired columns resting on stone piers. The east elevation also has assymetrical openings with mostly 2/2 windows with the same surrounds as the main facade. A 1 story, enclosed porch with a shed roof covers the elevation and is sheathed in clapboard. The south elevation has symmetrical placement of 2/2 segmentally arched windows and two attic vent windows. The north elevation is like the south except that there are only openings in the front half of the elevation. A door is located in the rear enclosed porch bay.

Outbuildings: Located several feet north of the house, the barn consists of a stone foundation and board and batten siding. The gable roof of corrugated tin is oriented on a north-south axis. The main opening is located on the west elevation into which the barn is banked. A shed-roofed chicken coop, located to the east of the tavern, is constructed of concrete block and vertical siding. Two other concrete block sheds are associated with the barn; both have shed roofs of corrugated tin.

8.1 Significance

Wolfe's Tavern is significant in representing a late eighteenth-early nineteenth century commercial building in the region. In type and location, it reflects the importance of taverns and hotels in burgeoning settlements. Architecturally, it survives as one of the earliest buildings constructed in the region. It shows the popularity of log as a construction material from the beginnings of settlement.

Wolfe's Tavern can be compared to other taverns in the surrounding region and in Frederick County. It has a long facade with a large number of bays (six) which appears typical in taverns. There are several other surviving taverns in the county including two in the Thurmont Election District (one on Catoclin Furnace Road and the other on Kelly's Store Road). Wolfe's Tavern has retained much of its historic fabric including german siding and segmental arch treatment above openings. It compares favorably with other resources of its type. Like most of the other buildings originally utilized as taverns, Wolfe's Tavern now serves as a residence.

According to an earlier survey form (Carlton Brown, 1969), the tavern was owned and operated by David Wolfe in the early 1800s. An order for the sign of the tavern dated the building by 1800. The tavern was ideally situated on the main route from Hagerstown to Emmitsburg. The building was still referred to as Wolfe's Tavern on the 1858 Bond Map; by 1873, it was owned by Mrs. Wolfe. In the late nineteenth century, the tavern had been converted into residential form by Thomas Cline Fox, an area resident.
