146-148 B&O Avenue
Built around 1835
Frederick, Frederick County, Maryland
Private dwellings

Brief Description

This two-story gable-roofed duplex is one of the oldest remaining structures on B&O Avenue. It was probably built at the same time as the building to its east, 150-152 B&O Avenue, which is nearly identical in form and materials. Like 150-152 B&O Avenue, its side and rear walls are built of limestone, while the more expensive material, brick, is reserved for the front elevation. Unlike its deteriorated and vacant neighbor, however, 146-148 B&O Avenue is in excellent condition, and its exterior retains a high degree of historic integrity.

Summary Statement of Significance

This double dwelling is a contributing building in the Frederick Historic District. This building, and its nearly identical neighbor to the east, were most likely built in the mid-to late 1830s as rental or speculative dwellings. Both appear to have been occupied in 1840 by renters who later purchased them. This duplex was occupied by the Geitz family from as early as 1840 into the mid-1850s. The Shuffler family purchased the house in 1855 and retained it into the twentieth century. Both the Geitzes and the Shufflers were working-class families of German descent.

Contributing Resource Count: 1 building

This two-story gable-roofed duplex is one of the oldest remaining structures on B&O Avenue and was probably built concurrently with the building to its east, 150-152 B&O Avenue, which is nearly identical in form and materials. Like 150-152 B&O Avenue, its side and rear walls are built of limestone, while the more expensive material, brick, is reserved for the front elevation. Unlike its deteriorated and vacant neighbor, however, 146-148 B&O Avenue is in excellent condition, and its exterior retains a high degree of historic integrity.

The dwelling exhibits the typical two-room floor plan of other duplexes in the Lower Depot and Welty's Addition neighborhoods. The kitchen was originally located in the basement and was accessed from an exterior entrance at the back of the house. The two rooms of the first floor included a formal parlor at the front and an informal parlor for family at the rear. The dwelling was built out to its front lot line, facing the B&O Railroad tracks. Its substantial yard to the rear, which originally included access to the basement kitchen, was an important area for outbuildings, livestock, and vegetable gardens.

The original portion of this duplex is a four-bay, double pile, brick and limestone dwelling, built on a low limestone foundation. The brick on the north front elevation is laid in four-course-American bond and has been painted red. The corbeled cornice is of two-course brick. The gabled roof is covered with standing-seam metal and has snow birds along its lower edges. The front doors of each unit are located in the second and third bays of the symmetrical front facade. The doors have wood lintels, but their transoms have been covered with wood. The original doors have been replaced with a three-light, three-panel door on 146 B&O Avenue and a four-light, three-panel door on 148 B&O Avenue, and both have storm doors. The two-over-two single sash windows of 146 B&O Avenue are replacements, as are the one-over-one sash windows of 148 B&O Avenue. The windows have wood sills and lintels, but the sills on 148 B&O Avenue are covered with aluminum. A two-step, poured-concrete stoop leads to the front door of 146 B&O Avenue, while a shed-roofed porch has been added across the front of 148 B&O Avenue. This porch is supported on milled lumber posts which rest on a concrete-block porch wall. The porch floor and steps are poured-concrete. The ghost of an earlier porch is visible at the west end of the porch.

The west gable-end wall is built of limestone, except for a brick section at the peak of the gable and a brick return along the north end of the wall. The interior brick end chimney has been parged. The only opening in the wall is a small attic window just below the brick of the gable peak. The east gable end is a mirror image of the west elevation, except that its chimney has not been parged.

The south rear elevation is constructed of limestone and has rear doors to the units in its second and third bays. The doors are both obscured, however, by one-story rear additions. The second story of each unit has one centrally placed window with flat wood sills and lintels. The sill on the six-over-six sash window on the rear of 146 B&O Avenue has been replaced, while the window on 148 B&O Avenue has been replaced with a one-over-one sash. The exterior basement entrances are located directly below the first story windows in the first and fourth bays. Shed-roofed storage rooms, that share a wall, have been added at the rear entrances of both units. These additions are covered with vinyl siding, and the continuous shed roof over them is covered with standing-seam metal. The shed on the rear of 146 B&O Avenue has a door and a small window on its south elevation. The shed on the rear of 148 B&O Avenue has a door on its east elevation and is slightly larger than that on the adjacent unit.

Two noncontributing out-buildings stand at the rear of 148 B&O Avenue. One is a plywood, gambrel-roofed playhouse, and the other is an aluminum, gable-roofed storage shed.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The double dwelling at 146-148 B&O Avenue, as well as the nearly identical double dwelling next door at 150-152 B&O Avenue, were most likely built in the mid-to late 1830s as rental or speculative dwellings. Both appear to have been occupied in 1840 by renters who later purchased them. This duplex was occupied by the Geitz family from as early as 1840 into the mid-1850s. The Shuffler family purchased the house in 1855 and retained it into the twentieth century. Both the Geitzes and the Shufflers were of German descent.

The dwelling stands on land that had belonged to Michael Buckey since the early 1800s. According to an 1834 deed, Buckey owned a house and lot on Patrick Street and owned an adjoining tract containing twelve acres that was part of a larger tract called the Resurvey on Meadow. By that time, however, Buckey had incurred debt and had been forced into bankruptcy. All of his property, including his real estate, five slaves, two horses, a cow, a wagon, and personal effects, was turned over to his trustee, Richard Marshall, who was to oversee its sale to raise funds to pay Buckey's creditors. Buckey was allowed to retain only clothing enough for himself and his family.

Several years prior to the sale, the B&O Railroad had laid tracks in the area. None of the buildings in the Lower Depot neighborhood appear to have built prior to the laying of the tracks, since the alignment of the railroad dictated the orientation of the lots and the dwellings that were built upon them.

On September 11, 1835 James Geddings bought a large portion of Buckey's holdings from Marshall. On May 21, 1838 Geddings then sold 5.5 acres of the tract to Robert Reid, who was described in the deed as a resident of the City of Baltimore. Several months later, Robert Reid sold the land to Joseph Reid. Both men were described in the deed as residents of Fulton, Ohio. Several months later Joseph Reid, then listed of Cleveland Ohio, sold the land to Joshua Dill for $5.00 since he was indebted to him. Neither Reid was listed in city directories of Baltimore or Cleveland from the period.

Some time during these transfers of property, both 146-148 and 150-152 B&O Avenue were erected, because in 1840, they both appear to have been occupied. The 1840 census listed a household headed by Charles Getz [Geitz], immediately adjacent to that of Henry Frazier, who owned 144 B&O Avenue. Getz purchased the dwelling in 1850. Similarly, John Koontz, who purchased 150-152 in 1850 was also listed in the census. Two additional households that appeared between the Geitz and Koontz households were likely the occupants of the other portions of both double houses. If that is the case, Geitz probably lived in 146 B&O Avenue, and a household headed by John Murman occupied 148 B&O Avenue. The Geitz household consisted of one man in his twenties and one man in his fifties, a woman between the ages of 15 and 20, a woman in her twenties, and a woman in her forties. The Murman household included one man in his thirties, a woman in her twenties, and a girl under five years of age.

In 1847, Charles Geitz purchased from Joshua and Mary Dill for $65 a tract that extended from the rear of the lot containing his house, south to Jail Street (present South Street). In the deed for the transfer, the house at 146-148 B&O Avenue was described as a stone dwelling. Three years later, in 1850, Geitz bought the lot containing the house for $700.

Interior access was permitted on the first floors of both units. The interior of 146 B&O Avenue was measured. The interior of 146 B&O Avenue has been renovated with dropped ceilings and wall paneling. The original wood floors have been covered with carpet and linoleum. The window and door surrounds, as well as the plain baseboards, however, appear original. The fireplace in the southwest corner of the north room has been replaced by a heat pump. The south room, originally an informal parlor, is now the kitchen. Some of the original beaded tongue-and-groove wainscotting remains, but the chair rail has been replaced. A box, winder stair to the second story is located in the southeast corner of the kitchen. There is closet space beneath the stair. Although the second floor and attic were not accessible, the present owner stated that additional bedrooms have been added in the attic, and an attic door allows interior access between the two units.

The interior of 148 B&O Avenue is a mirror image of the unit to the west, and it has many of the same interior alterations. However, the fireplace remains intact in the southeast corner of the formal parlor, although its has been blocked-in with brick. The wood fireplace surround has Greek Revival elements. These elements include pilasters, resting on rectangle blocks and supporting a mantle frieze with a bull's-eye on its central block.

The 1850 census enumerated five members in Charles Geitz's household, all of whom were natives of Germany. Charles Geitz was 63, and his wife Ann was 53. No occupation was listed for either, but Geitz's $1,000 worth of real estate included the large tract of land behind his home, and his 1852 tax assessment included an assessment for livestock. Therefore, they probably farmed their land for income or sustenance. Also in the house were 40-year-old Michael Lutz, a laborer, 33-year-old Mary Lutz, likely his wife, and 7-year-old John Lutz. Because even the seven-year-old was listed as a native of Germany, the Lutzes probably immigrated to the United States with the large wave of German immigrants in the late 1840s. The other half of the Geitz's double house was possibly occupied by a young German couple, Augustus and Louisa Hernick, who were listed in the census between the Geitz and Frazier households.

In 1855, Geitz sold the property to Charles Shuffler for $950. Listed as the Shuffers in the 1860 census, the family consisted of 49-year-old Charles, a laborer, his 42-year-old wife Barbara, and their six children, who ranged in age from 3 to 19. The eldest, John D., also worked as a laborer. All of the children were born in Maryland, but Barbara and Charles were natives of Bavaria. Renter's listed in the census adjacent to the Shuffers were John Heitz, a carpenter, and his wife and child, and by Michael Downey, an Irish laborer. One or both of these households probably rented the other half of the house.

After 1866, Barbara Shuffler was assessed for taxes on the house, probably because Charles had died. According to the 1870 census, her household included two sets of twins, 13-year-olds Emma and Mary and 10-year-olds George and Luther. Barbara Shuffler possibly rented the other half of the house to the Butcher family, which was African-American. Charles Butcher, a 49-year-old laborer, had a 42-year-old wife and four grown children, all single and in their twenties. Two of their sons worked as laborers, and one of their daughters worked as a domestic servant.

By 1880, Barbara Shuffler was living in the house with only her two twin sons, George and Luther, who were both tanners. Listed in the census adjacent to the Shuffler household was that of John and Emmeline Haberkorn. John was a car maker, whose parents were born in Baden, and Emmeline, whose parents were born in Bavaria, was probably Barbara's daughter (who was listed as Emma in the 1870 census).

In 1886, Charles Shuffler's heirs divided the property in half. Number 146 B&O Avenue was sold to George T.M. and Minnie R. Shuffler, and 148 B&O Avenue was sold to Martin Shuffler. From this point until 1981, the two halves of the house belonged to different owners.

George T.M. Shuffler, still a tan yard worker, resided in the west side of the house until 1902, when he sold the house to Emma Wertheimer for $600. The Wertheimers used the house as a rental property. According to the census, it was rented in 1920 by Ella Magee, a 55-year-old widow who was born in Virginia and worked as a shirtmaker. She lived with her daughter Mary Baker, who had two children, Earl and Eva. In 1920, the house was rented by 66-year-old William Peddicord, his 55-year-old wife Mary C., and their four children, who ranged in age from 12 to 23. The census does not give occupations for any members of the family, and all were listed as illiterate. Mary Peddicord was listed in city directories as the head of household throughout the 1920s and into the 1930s, but in 1940, Arthur and Violet Kline and their household of six rented the dwelling. Arthur Kline was a laborer at the nearby Ox Fibre Brush Company. Wertheimer sold the house Ethel Ramsburg in 1942 who continued to use it for rental income. She sold it to Betty and James Bowers in 1971, who are its present owner-occupants.

In 148 B&O Avenue, Martin Shuffler had died by 1897, and his widow Irene was assessed for taxes on the property. Irene Shuffler was listed as the head of household in the 1900 census and was described as a 30-year-old brickmaker with two daughters and a son, all in school. By 1910, Irene Shuffler moved with her children from 148 B&O Avenue to 164 B&O Avenue, where she managed a boarding house. That year, 148 B&O Avenue was rented by 56-year-old widow Annie Strickler. Strickler had lived in the Lower Depot neighborhood since at least 1880, when she was listed in the census with her husband, an engineer.

In 1920 148 B&O Avenue was rented by Reamshardt Richard, a 54-year-old butcher, who was a native of Germany, and his 65-year-old wife Amora, who was born in Maryland. Irving Shuffler, who had grown up in the house, moved back into it in the 1930s. In 1939, he and his wife Mary purchased the family home at an auction. Irving Shuffler, also an employee of the Ox Fibre Brush Company, died in the late 1950s, but his widow remained in the house for some time before selling it in 1974. In 1980, the present owner, Betty Bowers, purchased the east half of the house, thereby returning the building to the ownership of a single family. Bowers lives in the west half of the house, and other members of her family occupy the east half.
