DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Christian J. Otto Farm consists of a late nineteenth century frame dwelling and four outbuildings of the same general period: a frame washhouse, a stone vaulted cave, a frame hog pen, and a frame bank barn. The dwelling is a two story, gable-roofed building on an uncoursed, rubble stone foundation. Its basic configuration is a 5 bay by 2 bay, center hall plan with two shed-roofed additions on the rear.

The facade (NE elevation) has a symmetrical 5 bay, center door arrangement with a central cross gable and a one bay entrance porch. 4/4 sash windows with plain board surrounds and molded drip boards light the first and second floor levels, while a four-pane casement with a similar surround pierces the gable. The entrance porch sits on a high foundation, four square posts with molded capitals supporting its shed roof.

The southeast endwall is pierced by four 4/4 sash windows, two per floor, and a four-pane casement in the gable. A concrete block garage with a sheltered patio above it has been added to the northwest endwall. The door that leads from the patio into the house may possibly be original but the windows on this wall have been altered. The first floor window has been reduced in size, and the two second floor windows have had their original sash replaced with 3/1 lights.

The rear wall of the building is masked by a 1½ story, shed-roofed frame addition and a one story, shed-roofed, concrete block addition.

The roof is covered with diamond-shaped asphalt shingles and has a box cornice with partial gable end returns and a plain board frieze. Two interior brick chimneys project from the ridgeline, one at each endwall.

An undated photograph (included with the negatives for this site) shows a 1½ story, log wing attached to the northwest endwall of the house. The present owners report having this structure removed several years ago due to extensive termite damage.

The washhouse is a gable-roofed, stud and rail structure resting on hewn sills. Its exterior is covered with vertical boards, and a stone chimney rises from the center of the building.

The cave (root cellar) is set into the side of a hill and consists of a stone structure with a frame, shed-roofed covering. Although the interior was inaccessible, the exterior of the masonry reveals a barrel vault that is incorporated into the structure for support.

The hog pen is an oblong, gable-roofed, board and batten building on a foundation of uncoursed, roughly cut stone.

The barn is a gable-roofed, frame structure with a forebay across the rear and a coursed, roughly squared stone foundation. Its frame is constructed by hewn lumber mortise and tenoned together. The owners report that the initials A.J.F. and the date 1900 are painted on one of the interior beams. Vertical board siding sheathes the exterior. The forebay has recently been enclosed with concrete block.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Christian J. Otto Farm is a good example of a late nineteenth century farm site complete with outbuildings.

The original settler on this property is thought to have been Jacob Otto, the resident of the log dwelling.¹ C.J. Otto supposedly had the frame house built, and Asa Fresh, a subsequent owner raised the barn.²
