DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Ray Yoder House is located several feet below Devil's Half Acre Road, near Keyser's Ridge in Northern Garrett County. The ground slopes down from N to S, making the house's foundation more visible on the S elevation.

The house is a two-story, gable roofed, T-plan dwelling, with the T extending from the N elevation of the main block. The main block measures two bays long by one bay wide, and the T measures two bays by one bay. The entrance door is at the S side of the W elevation of the T, and one-story, shed-roofed porches fill both sides of the T. The N end of the T porch on the E elevation has been enclosed to form a storage room.

The house rests on a coursed stone foundation and is covered with grey brick-patterned asphalt siding. The windows are all two-over-two sash with plain board surrounds. All trim is painted white. The roof is covered with corrugated metal.

The house has three interior brick stove chimneys: one at the W gable end of the main block, one at the T gable end, and one just E of center on the main block. The porch roofs are covered with corrugated metal and supported by iron posts. The interior of the house exhibits a central staircase, but is otherwise unknown.

East of the house, a vigorous spring emerges and runs S to Mill Run, which runs S of the house. To the SW of the house stands a frame bank barn on a stone foundation. The barn is covered with vertical siding and has a corrugated metal roof.
