The Harry L. and Lois A. Martin House, built in 1947, relates to the continued expansion and settlement of the Oakland and Mountain Lake Park areas in the mid-twentieth century. The development of summer vacation resorts and hotels in the Oakland area in the late nineteenth century had helped to stimulate settlement of the region. Although no longer as prominent a resort in the early and mid-twentieth century, Oakland still remained an important local mercantile and community center, and continued its growth throughout this period. Residential development on the outskirts of town typically occurred along pre-existing road networks. The Martin house exemplifies much of the region's mid-twentieth-century residential architecture.

Research has not identified any associations with the lives of persons significant to the Oakland area's past or with events that have contributed significantly to broad patterns of the area's historical development. The architecture does not represent a particularly distinctive type, period, or method of construction, nor does it represent the work of a master, possess high artistic values, or represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction. This resource has not yet yielded and is not likely to yield significant information important in history or prehistory.

Prepare are both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

This is a one-story, four-by-two-bay, gable-roofed rectangular frame dwelling with a small, gable-roofed, bracket-supported front porch hood. Built in 1947, the house faces east and is located on a high, open site on U.S. 219 about one-and-one-half miles south of Oakland.

The foundation was not visible when the house was surveyed due to a substantial snow cover. The walls are sheathed in cream-colored wooden weatherboards finished with brown trim; the house is topped with an asphalt-shingled gable roof. A single exterior yellow brick chimney rises on the south gable. Rectangular metal louvers in the gable peaks ventilate the attic.

Windows are a mixture of twelve-light casement, eight-over-eight double-hung sash with snap-in muntins, and three-light sash in the upper gables. Brown and white metal awnings shade the windows on the south and east elevations. The main entrance, which is located just to the right of center on the primary elevation, is fitted with a wooden one-light half-glass door; this opening is sheltered by a bracketed gable-roofed hood with a curved underside. A one-story frame gable-roofed vestibule is located on the rear elevation and shelters the rear entrance; the door in this rear entrance was not visible when the house was surveyed.

A one-story gable-roofed garage is linked to the westernmost corner of the house via a brick walkway. This building is constructed of rusticated concrete block with board-and-batten-sheathed upper gables and topped with an asphalt-shingled roof. Both a single overhead paneled metal garage door and a standard-sized wood and glass door pierce the east elevation. An open carport is attached to each gable.

A straight driveway oriented perpendicular to U.S. 219 runs along the western side of the house, terminating at the garage. A straight sidewalk with a set of steps at either end connects Old U.S. 219 and the front door. While the front of the property is mostly open, a line of trees runs across the rear part of the yard. The house is presently occupied and remains in good condition.
