The ruinous Pythian Avenue Cemetery relates to the continued growth and settlement of the Oakland region in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The development of summer vacation resorts and hotels in the Oakland area in the nineteenth century had helped to stimulate settlement of the area. Toward the end of this period, a writer described Oakland as a commercial town surrounded by rich farming and grazing land. Although no longer as prominent a resort in the early twentieth century, Oakland still remained an important local mercantile and community center and continued its growth during this period. Most of the visible gravestones in the Pythian Avenue Cemetery have been toppled and are illegible, but the form and material of several of the stones suggest a late nineteenth or early twentieth-century date.

Research has not identified any associations with the lives of persons significant to the Oakland area's past or with events that have contributed significantly to broad patterns of the area's historical development. The architecture does not represent a particularly distinctive type, period, or method of construction, nor does it represent the work of a master, possess high artistic values, or represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction. This resource has not yet yielded and is not likely to yield significant information important in history or prehistory.

It is probably largely inaccessible and perhaps invisible during the summer months due to vines and underbrush.

This is a ruinous cemetery which stands in a wooded area about thirty yards north of a pronounced right-angle curve in Pythian Avenue. The graveyard, barely visible beneath a layer of ice and snow when it was surveyed, contains several toppled stones. One, which consists of a graduated plinth base and an arch-topped tablet, is completely flattened and the inscription is illegible. A second, much smaller arch-topped head or foot stone is embellished with crimped edges and still retains a portion of an inscription: "George Fra., [illegible]." A third monument consists of a flat base and a toppled, probably arch-topped stone; because the stone was embedded in a layer of snow and ice when it was surveyed, the configuration of the stone was not clearly visible. A fourth large arch-topped tablet which originally stood on a flat plinth base had also been toppled; this stone was embellished with a carved urn on top. The fifth and final visible above-ground feature consisted of another monument base which stood alone, seemingly separated from its upper section.

The cemetery is in ruinous condition. It is probably largely inaccessible and perhaps invisible during the summer months due to vines and underbrush.
