This is another example of the ubiquitous shotgun style house, the most popular style for workingman's housing in the period between 1875 and 1920, just as the front gable Victorian house was the most popular Middle Class style. The V-shaped front porch and the bay window on the east elevation give it more style than usual.

SPECIFIC DATES Between 1880 & 1900 BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This small well kept house west of Eastern Alley was probably built shortly after Charles Dallam bought the lands from the Hays Brothers in the early 1880's. It was originally plainer than many built in the Hays Addition, since it presents its unadorned gable end to the street. Since it was built, however, it acquired a pair of bay windows after 1904 which acquisition separates it from most of its neighbors.

In 1920 it was owned by J. W. and Mary S. Hewitt, a black couple. It was assessed at $811, $240 for the lot and $571 for the house. Its current good condition testifies to the fact that the owner lives there.
