Nathan Dean House
125 E. Broadway
Bel Air
private

Nathan Dean provided Broadway with its most distinctive house when he bought the 1876 Victorian house on this lot and moved it back. He then designed and built the new front with a partial mansard roof and matching two story hexagonal bay windows. The aluminum siding has swept much of the character from the facade, but it stands as one of Bel Air's few attempts at the Second Empire style.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This two story plus mansard roofed house is on the south side of East Broadway at 125, in the Town of Bel Air, Harford County, Maryland. It was probably a three bay gable roofed house with a front Gothic gable and a front porch like its neighbors, but in 1885 Nathan Dean bought it, had it moved back and gave it its present facade. It has recently been covered with aluminum siding; that and its renovation into apartments has destroyed most of the mansard effect but one can still observe it on the facade.

The building is strongly divided into three bays by the two two-story three-sided bay windows which flank the entry. The bays are joined at the second level by a porch with an open balustrade which shelters the entry. The entrance is composed of a two-pane horizontal transom, narrow side-lights with three panes up and a panel down and the original door which has two panels down and two, round-arched panels up. The three steps leading to the entrance are rounded and of concrete. The windows of the 1875 house are 6/6 double-hung sash set in plain mitred surrounds. The 1885 windows (on the front and in the north bay of the sides) are 1/1. The three gable-roofed dormers in the mansard are 2/2 with segmental-arched bays. A "door bell" carving is applied to each just in the gable of the dormer.

The rear (south) elevation has three levels of wooden, single run stairs to the porches at each level, giving access to each level. The porches have open balustrades supported by plain posts.

Despite the obscurity that the aluminum siding gives to the original lines of the house, this building has a unique facade in Bel Air, a vernacular version of the Second Empire style.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This large house on Broadway has one of the few remaining mansard roofs left in town. It is unique in having balanced double bay windows flanking the entrance, connected on the second level with a balustrade. Renovations over the years and the recently applied aluminum siding have destroyed the mansard line on the sides and back, but the front (north) elevation still shows it clearly.

Joseph Street bought the lot from Stevenson Archer in 1876 (33/144) and agreed to sell it to James Carroll for $775.04. Street or Carroll built the house soon after, for it appears on the 1878 map. It was probably very like the other houses on the east end of the block, a three bay house with a Gothic gable and front porch. Carroll died in debt to Archer, Street and others for the construction of the house.

As a result of a court case (equity 26/433) the property was sold to James P. Russell for $745 in 1881 (43/75). Russell held it until 1885 when he sold it to Nathan Dean for $900 (54/322). Dean moved the house back from the street and added a new facade and one bay to the front length of the structure. The new portion was designed by Dean, who was a cabinetmaker. The work was done by local contractor, Patrick Dunnigan.

The Deans sold it to their daughter, Anna, (1906, 117/470), who later married Edwin C. Kirkwood. In 1933, the Kirkwoods lost it because of a defaulted mortgage (1924, 190/474). It went to W. Edgar Wilson for $7300 (225/282). Wilson sold it to Edward Coale and George Chinaris in 1945 (288/1). It was probably apartments by that time. The Chinaris heirs sold a half interest in the property to James Papachrist in 1952 (387/233) and the remaining half to Sophia Papachrist in 1962 (591/516).

Today the building has six residents on three floors.
