This house is a fine example of how 19th century houses "just grew". Originally a one and a half story salt box, it was raised to two full stories in the 20th century. It has acquired other additions as well: a bay window and an enclosed side porch with sleeping porch above. No longer of any particular style (if it ever was), it still has a good deal of charm.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This two-story gable roofed cottage is numbered 219 Broadway in the Town of Bel Air, Harford County, Maryland, but it faces Hickory. It has recently been covered with aluminum siding. It was originally a three-bay side hall plan with two small rooms on the north side of the hall. When the south part of the porch was enclosed after 1929, it became a four-bay, center-hall plan. The windows, except those in the sleeping porch, are 6/6 double-hung sash set in molded surrounds. The front (east) porch has a hipped roof carried on plain square posts raised on blocks. The door, in the third bay from the north, probably dates to early in this century. It has 15 panes of glass. The shed in the rear has casement windows. A three-sided, hipped roof bay window, added c. 1929, enlivens the east bay on the north elevation and lights what was the parlor.

The first floor has four rooms and bath, two rooms (parlor and dining room) on the north side and one (the enclosed porch) on the south. The kitchen, bath, and part of the original dining room are in the shed addition. The chimney projects into the dining room. The house was heated by stoves into this chimney originally.

A closed-string, single-run staircase runs up the south side of the hall. It has plain, square newel and balusters. The woodwork in the house is entirely plain save for a full entablature over the entry inside. The original doors are four panel.

Upstairs there are five bedrooms (now offices) and a bath. The attic shows the many changes of the roof-line.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This little house at the corner of Broadway and Hickory has had many alterations. According to Mrs. Graybeal, the daughter of Charles Reed, who grew up there, the house was originally a salt-box or one and a half story cottage; from the present floor plan it probably was a side-hall single stack. The 1878 map shows P. Boleyn as the resident. Mrs. Boleyn was a dressmaker. The roof was raised to a full two stories by James Trundle, who owned it in the early years of this century. He probably added the kitchen and northwest chamber, too. At that time the veranda ran along the front (east) and the south side. Charles Reed, Senior, bought the property for $6000 in 1920. He added the bay window on the north elevation, a fireplace in the northeast chamber, probably the kitchen cabinets, and enclosed the porch on the south side, giving it a sleeping porch on the second story. These improvements took place during the great depression. The lot had a tennis court to the south on the Hickory Street side; that has been replaced by a macadam parking lot. The Graybeals removed the fireplace in the parlor and enlarged the enclosed porch so that its front (east) wall was level with the parlor's wall. The present occupants have made no changes to the structural fabric. They did side it in aluminum.

The little cottage was on a 68½ acre parcel that Dr. William Munnikhuisen bought from Ellen Davis for $2000 in 1855 (2/351). Miss Davis had inherited it from her father, Ruben H. Davis. It was known as "Ellen Dale", and all the lots on East Broadway were a part of this farm. Dr. Munnikhuisen sold this acre with its buildings to James S. Lytle for $1550 in 1868. Lytle had an oyster bar in the east portion of the Holden Building on Courtland Street next to the Harford Democrat office (now the B,G & E Building). In 1871 Lytle bought Prigg's Hotel (Stagmer's) at the corner of Main and Courtland, or at least leased it, and sold this house to Prigg (25/261) for $2500. In August 1872, Prigg exchanged this property and another parcel with John S. Dallam for some Main Street property (27/409). In 1881 John Dallam sold it to Charles L. Dallam for $2250 (44/63). Five years later it returned to the Lytles when Dallam sold it to Mary (Maria) Lytle for $1650 (56/398). An 1893 equity case (47/46) shows that by that time Stevenson Williams, Laura Prigg, John McCullough, and William Doxen had some claim to the property. It was forced to sale and Mrs. Lytle paid $1450 for it at the Courthouse door (81/113). In 1902 she sold it to James Trundle (104/265); he lived there until his death in the early years of World War I. Charles Reed, Sr., bought it from the trustee for the Trundle children in 1920 (166/444). Mr. Reed raised his family there. At his death it passed to his daughter, Jean Reed Graybeal. The Graybeals sold it to Ira A. De Armon, Jr., in 1960 (560/320). In 1973 the De Armons sold it to James H. Brinegar as his State Farm Insurance office there. He rents the upstairs offices.

The career of this little house is typical of much of vernacular architecture. It "just grew" over the years as the needs of the different owners changed. It is probably typical also that it has been changed into an office building. While it is no longer a private residence, it is in sound economic health as it enters its second century of life.
