

The Wren Box
304 Williams
Bel Air
Private

If any house in Bel Air deserves the adjective "charming", it is the Wren Box. This colonial revival house is not small, but it looks petite despite the fact that it is built of stone. The gable roof slopes down to form the porch roof, carried on fluted doric columns. Fluted columns are rare in Town. The sun porch on the south side nicely balances the mass of the front porch and the deck railing provides a contrast to the rough stone mass. Cottage features in the house include a dutch front door, the tiny hexagonal bay on the rear, the gable hood supported on strong curved brackets over the north back door, and the plank shutters with diamond cut outs. The interior is equally charming and quite roomy. The fireplace in the living room has a classical wooden mantel matched by the one in the master bedroom upstairs. The sun porch has a large stone fireplace back to back with the living room one.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This one and a half story, three bay, stone rubble house is at 304 Williams Street in the Town of Bel Air, Harford County, Maryland. The rough stone quoins and flat arches that top windows and doors sharply delineate the little house. From the front (east) the slate roof slopes down to form the top of the front porch, which is carried on fluted doric posts. A large shed-roofed double dormer breaks the roof slope in the middle. It has a pair of 1/1 windows. The entrance is in the middle bay of the front elevation, a Dutch door.

The south elevation has a large plain outside end chimney. The bottom half of the chimney is obscured by a rectangular sunporch of tongue and groove with a second story deck of square balusters and larger square posts. On the second story the chimney stack is flanked by a door (west) and a window (east), each having plank cottage shutters with a diamond cut out in the top. A pair of ventilators flanks the chimney in the gable.

The back (west) elevation of the house is the most complex. Three casement windows march across the second story. The first story has a tiny wooden hexagonal bay window flanked by doors. The south door is set deeply and is flanked by shutters matching those in the second story gable end. The north door is topped by a gable-roofed hood on graceful solid brackets. North of that is the frame gable-roofed dog house Bel Air uses to hide its basement doors.

The interior of the house is charming. There are three rooms and a bath on the first floor: north living room, and south dining room with kitchen and powder room behind. A little passageway (lighted by the bay window) connects kitchen and living room under the staircase.

The staircase is partially enclosed in the north wall of the living room. It has a square newel and a few square balusters. The living room fireplace has a classical mantel of square engaged colonettes on blocks leading to panels which support the shelf. A matching panel is in the center of the frieze. Cupboards in the sides of the chimney breast and built in bookcases complete the treatment. There is a square opening between living room and dining room with folding wooden doors.

The door between the dining room and the kitchen has a round head with fan tracery over 9 panes of glass over 4 panels. A similar door in the north half of the same (west) wall leads to a cupboard. It formerly also lead to the kitchen but was blocked up when that part of the kitchen was enclosed to make the powder room.

All woodwork is plain. The windows are set flush with the outside wall plane and are lined with panelled woodwork.

The tongue and groove sunporch reveals a massive fireplace back to back with the living room one.

The second story has three bedrooms, a bath, and a small chamber over a portion of the kitchen which now has wooden access steps to the trap door to the attic. This was the apartment kitchen. The master bedroom (south west chamber) has a fireplace at an angle in the southeast corner. The mantel duplicates the one in the living room. There are two cupboards in the overmantel.

The southeast bedroom has built in cupboard and drawers in the east wall. The drawers take advantage of what would otherwise be wasted space in the area over the front porch.
