Streett Frame House
Streett, Md.

Capsule-Summary

This brick structure is actually a 19th century frame building with a modern veneer. It has been greatly altered by the present owners. Archival evidence indicates that it was once part of the Streett family holdings; indeed, that family owned most of the land immediately surrounding this house. (See HA-1596, HA-1609).

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This structure is located on La Grange Road, off Coen Road, west of Maryland Route 24 in Rocks. In its present form, it is a two story gable roof L-plan structure with a brick veneer, and a 2-story portico, facing north.

Initially, it was thought that this was one of Harford County's few brick residences. However, photographs in the collection of the Bowers family reveal that (35 years ago) this large house was a two story frame structure to which numerous additions have been added. The photos prior to the alterations reveal a two story frame gable roof structure, with clapboards, 2/2 windows, and interior end brick chimneys with corbelled caps. The house was 3 bays wide by 1 long bay deep with a center entrance, and a wraparound 1-story shed roof porch across the front (north) and 1 side (west). To the south is what appears to be a later semi-detached 1 story addition. The house is covered with wooden siding, either clapboards or drop siding.

A brief interior examination revealed the following construction details. The attic has hewn rafters and mitred and nailed at the ridge with small collar beams placed close to the ridge. The floor joists were also hewn, but studs and lathing at this level were all circular sawn, and fastened with fully matured cut nails. The walls were covered with hair-lime plaster. The bulk of the interior has been extensively altered so that no other details were visible.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

With the aid of photographs from a family scrapbook, in the possession of the current owner, it was determined that this brick house conceals an older frame structure. Indeed, 19th century brick houses are rather scarce in Harford County, especially in rural settings such as this. The photos that reveal a 2-story frame gable roof structure, and the minute bit of structural evidence uncovered in the attic suggest a construction date of third quarter 19th century, certainly no earlier. This is borne out by the title search, which ends with the land in possession of Thomas Streett Sr. (HDG 31/97). The Streetts were a large and well to do farming family who owned great amounts of land in this area, and whose descendants either built or inherited houses as this land was divided up. (See HA-1585, HA-1596, HA-1609).

Just as important as the architectural history of the house is the realization that it was the center of a small agrarian network, the family farm. Agriculture was the bread and butter of Harford County, throughout the 19th century and the prosperity of the countryside was due to the success of family farms such as this one. While the house is architecturally but another example of a rural-vernacular style, it is at the same time an excellent reflection on the attitudes the hard working, no nonsense farmers who lived in them.
