The Little House, 55 W. Gordon St., faces south on a tree-shaded lot in Richardson's Addition in a block of houses built in the 1930s and 1940s. The L-shaped, white clapboard house with slate gable roof and an exterior stone chimney (east) was the first of its kind to be built in Bel Air. Inside it has a wide center hall, large living and dining rooms, kitchen, family room, 3 bedrooms and 2 baths.

Building began west of Main St. in Richardson's Addition in the 1880s; it and the Hayes Addition begun at the same time are the oldest extensions of the town. It is a mix of styles from Victorian to brick rancher, and a mix of classes as well, with working-man's housing along the north and south edges and middle class homes through the center. Built in 1931 by Dr. Main Little, a Bel Air dentist, this house was the first in the Indian Hill part of Richardson's Addition, a parcel of land surrounding the Richardson home place which was not developed until the heirs sold the old house. Its L-shape was a departure from the four-squares and bungalows built between the world wars, and its pleasing appearance and spacious, airy interior were later much copied.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Contributing resource count: one

The Little House, 55 W. Gordon St., faces south on a tree-shaded lot in a block of houses built in the 1930s and 1940s. The L-shaped, white clapboard house with slate gable roof and an exterior stone chimney (east) was the first of its kind to be built in Bel Air. With its wide center hall, large living and dining rooms, 3 bedrooms and 2 baths, the house is distinctive and comfortable, and its shape would become popular in town.

The shed-roofed front porch crosses the 3 eastern bays of the facade, tucked into the join between the main block and the front gabled ell. Fenestration is idiosyncratic. The facade has 4 bays (including the entrance) on the first floor and 3 on the second. The rear (north) elevation is equally idiosyncratic, with a hipped dormer in the center of the roof, 3 bays in the second story, the middle window set lower than the flankers, and a gabled single story addition projecting from the middle bay of the first story. Most windows are 8/8 double hung sash. The kitchen and west gable have casements. All except the casements are flanked by black shutters. On the first story of the west elevation, a side door placed between the 2 bays leads to the kitchen. While the exterior of the house sounds odd it actually forms a coherent and pleasing whole.

The spacious and airy interior has a southern feeling, probably because of the wide center hall which runs the length of the house to the addition. A bracketed, open-run, dog-leg staircase with turned stock newel and round tapered balusters rises along its east wall. To the right, the living room occupies that whole side of the block. The massive field-stone chimney breast with its stone mantel shelf rises to the ceiling on the east wall. Flanking the north window, a pair of Williamsburg influenced cupboards with paneled doors below and shelves above, end in round arches. The dining room occupies the ell and half of the main block to the west. The recently renovated kitchen lies behind, to the north. Double 3 paneled doors lead from the hall to the living room and dining room; their surrounds have a slight profile at the edge, as does the rest of the woodwork. The family room has mahogany paneling, a 1950s horizontal stone fireplace, slate floor, and a massive, multipaned window taking up most of the north wall. A full bath with shower is tucked in where the hall meets the addition.

On the second floor are 3 bedrooms and 2 baths with original tile and fixtures; those of the hall bath are lavender, surely the first colored fixtures in town. The bath to the master bedroom has the same fixtures in white. The 3rd level is divided into 2 rooms with unfinished floor and doors without hardware. There is a cedar lined closet at the head of the stairs.

The foundation is poured concrete, which was unusual in town then.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Building began west of Main St. in Richardson's Addition in the 1880s; it and the Hayes Addition, begun at the same time, are the oldest extensions of the town. It is a mix of styles from Victorian to brick rancher, and a mix of classes as well, with working-man's housing along the north and south edges and middle class homes through the center. Built in 1931 by Dr. Main Little, a Bel Air dentist, this house was the first in the Indian Hill part of Richardson's Addition, a parcel of land surrounding the Richardson home place which was not developed until the heirs sold the old house. Its L-shape was a departure from the four-squares and bungalows built between the world wars, and its pleasing appearance and spacious, airy interior were later much copied.

The bottom basement step bears the date 10-14-31, which may be the date the staircase was completed.

The house remained in the Little family until 1990, when Cybert O. Whitfill and his wife Marsha bought it. Whitfill is a Harford County Circuit Court Judge.

Alterations to the house by the Littles include the bath and family room addition and the Williamsburg influenced living room cupboards. Judging from the shape of the cupboards and the family room fireplace, as well as the bath fixtures, the changes were made sometime in the 1950s, along with renovations to the kitchen. The kitchen cupboards and the tile that was on the floor suggest that period. Before they moved in, the Whitfills renovated the kitchen, taking out a breakfast nook between the dining room and taking up the tile and refinishing the hardwood floors. Flagstones on the family room floor and on a small patio to the west by the kitchen door are said to have been part of the Bel Air sidewalks which were replaced by cement.
