The Cassilly-Coale House, 138 Hickory Ave., faces east on a slight rise from the street. Built in the early 1920s, it is a 4 bay, 2 story white clapboard, gable-roofed house with an odd parking area in the first story to the south, topped by an extension of the second story. Double-hung sash windows, 8/8 in the main block and 4/4 over the car port, are flanked by green shutters. In the center bay of the main block a stoop with an arched roof is carried on square posts and leads to a door flanked by narrow window lights. The second story window over the entry is shorter than its companions.

This lot was part of the land John L.G. Lee bought from his father. He built the house to the south on part of it [HA-1811]. Thomas Cassilly bought the lot from Lee in 1920 for $350, and there was a house on it when he sold the property in 1923 to William Richardson of Austin, Texas, for $5000. Richardson was a veteran of Confederate service who moved to Texas after the war and did well in the hardware business. He bought the house as a residence for his brother, Judge George W, Richardson, and his two sisters, Mary and Nannie Richardson. While the entry and the car port are unusual, the house is basically the popular 3 bay vernacular style built around Town before and after World War I.

The Cassilly-Coale House, 138 Hickory Ave., faces east on a slight rise from the street. Built in the early 1920s, it is a 4 bay, 2 story white clapboard, gable-roofed house with an odd parking area in the first story to the south, topped by an extension of the second story. Double-hung sash windows, 8/8 in the main block and 4/4 over the car port, are flanked by green shutters. In the center bay of the main block a stoop with an arched roof is carried on square posts and leads to a door flanked by narrow window lights. The second story window over the entry is shorter than its companions.

The broken lines of the gable roof that suggests the house has been expanded, but the outline of the present structure is consistent with that on the 1930 Sanborn map, if a rear ell not visible from the street exists. The map even documents the open parking space to the south. The area over it, now enclosed, may have been a sleeping porch. The exterior brick chimney rises between the main block and this room to the south. The interior was not available.

Captain Richardson died in 1924 at the age of 81. His heirs sold the property in 1942 to Charles William Coale. It stayed in the Coale family until 1990 when Thomas R. Coale sold it for $118,500 to J. Robert Martin and his son. They sold it in 1992 to real estate agent Carole Bowen for $125,000. It is on the market.
