Munnikhuysen House
202 S. Main Street
Bel Air
Private

This five bay brick house, built by Hall L. Munnikhuysen early in the 20th century, gives a classical touch to the nearly universal Victorian design of Main Street's remaining older buildings. The style and building material were very common in 19th century America, but Bel Air built frame houses almost exclusively, and the five bay design was not common either. The only other example was the now demolished Dunnigan House on Lee Street at North Main. The interior dates from the recent renovation into dentists' offices.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This two-story five bay white painted brick dwelling with a gable roof is on the west side of South Main Street, at #202, in the Town of Bel Air, Harford County, Maryland. The simple and balanced lines of the building with its center hall plan, its gable roof, and its two interior end chimneys present the classical idea of a comfortable dwelling of a middle class family. The present look is more classical than the original. The 1904 insurance map shows a porch across the front elevation and a smaller porch across the rear. The 1930 insurance map shows the front porch and a frame ell where the brick ell is today.

Today the front (east) elevation shows five bays. The windows are double-hung sash thermo-pane with 6/9 grid on the inside to simulate the small panes of the old windows. Set in cleanly and topped with wooden molded flat arches, the windows have new brick sills and are framed in black metal louvered shutters. The entrance has been altered recently. The door is new and has nine window panes over two false panels made by applying molding to the flat surface of the door. A transom of two horizontal panes has not been altered; the sidelights have been replaced with modern panels to simulate fluted pilasters with plain caps and bases. The gable ends of the house have a round-arched window under the gable today and two windows in the first story which match the front windows. The gable roofed west ell is of modern construction. It has shorter windows, 1/1, framed by the metal shutters. Two entrances to the basement offices exist, one staircase goes down parallel to the foundation in the south two bays of the front (east) elevation. The other goes down at right angles to the foundation in the south bay of the rear (west) elevation of the main block. Both have wrought iron bannisters.

The interior has been completely gutted and new dental offices have been built. Nothing of the old interior remains save for the angle of the staircase.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This painted brick vernacular house is not only an attractive building, which gives that portion of Main Street the residential look most of Main Street once had, but it is also a good example of early adaptive reuse. Once a double pile center hall plan private residence, it was adapted to dentists' offices by Dr. Russell. It continues in that use today.

This property and the next north one are on what was originally lot #13 on the town plat. In the mid-nineteenth century it was the property of N.W.S. Hays, the brother of Thomas A. Hays of the Hays-Jacobs house. The 1858 map shows the lot to be unoccupied. When Hays died he left debts and not enough ready cash to pay them. His land was sold to pay the debts. In 1867 Stevenson Archer, trustee in the court case of Otho Scott vs. Maria Hays et al (equity records 11/1), sold lot #13 to Isaac Amos, who built a store on the lot. Amos sold iron, steel, and hardware. Amos died in 1899 and his wife died in 1901. Both estates were incumbered and the property was sold in 1901 by William O. Davis, trustee in the equity case of Davis vs. Smith (equity records 57/61). The lot was purchased by Harry D. Hanway whose family operated the store on the northeast corner of the same intersection. Hanway demolished the Amos store and built his "cottage" on the corner of the lot. This house was built shortly thereafter. It and the Hanway House appear on the 1904 insurance map.

Hanway sold the house and lot to Hall L. Munnikhuisen in 1909 (127/118) for $3250. The house was then a double pile center hall plan, 4 rooms up and down. This house remained in the Munnikhuisen family until 1960 when Virginia Reed Munnikhuisen and Virginia R. Munnikhuisen, widow and daughter of Hall L. Munnikhuisen, sold it to Dr. Donald G. Russell. (Munnikhuisen died intestate July 23, 1954). Dr. Russell added the small ell in the back. In 1962 he sold the property to the present owners, the FRS Corporation (598/126). Dr. Philip Brown has recently gutted the interior and built the sort of offices and examination rooms necessary to modern dental care. At that time the entrance was altered and the windows were replaced with thermopane glass. Care was taken that the small pane look was reproduced.
