This Frame house, two and a half stories, ridgetime, three bays by two rooms deep, ^{faces east with a ridgetime running north-south.} A central chimney rising from inside walls has been closed off at the peak, and two chimneys stand at the ends of the house. ~~One chimney at the wing at the west end~~
 A wing ^{goes west along} ~~back from~~ the north side of the house, and contains a very tall brick chimney.

Windows are six lights on six, there are two peaked dormers in the east roof, and the end walls have two quarter-circle windows jutting out from under the chimneys. ^{Other windows in other walls are unevenly spaced.}

This and the front porch and the lean-to roof for the rear wing may be part of alterations in 1849 mentioned by Wright (see #9 below).

This should be interesting archaeology.

Once an inn on the main road between Baltimore and York, Pa., the origins of this building are unknown. It has been a farmhouse for the Henderson family - part of their 200 acre property, and is now lived in by their elderly descendants. Half the house has been closed off since Mrs. Luckey's sister died.

The Maryland State Roads marker in front of the house reads: Black Horse Tavern. George Washington spent the night of June 5, 1773, on his way back to Mt Vernon from Columbia College in New York, where he had left his stepson Jackie Custis.

Black Horse Tavern being received by Mrs. Gardiner Smith. Reports quoted in the Harford County Directory and Queen Harford Heritage state that the inn was torn down by Dr. Thor Anderson, who built the present* house in 1849.

Apparently only the old sign is original. The inn may have been across the road or part of the present house may be residual...

The town was also an educational and religious center, having been selected for the site of Cokesbury College, the first Methodist College in America. Two academies added to the educational prestige of the village. The Cokesbury Academy was under the jurisdiction of the college and continued for several years after that institution came to a disastrous end. The Abingdon Academy was opened in 1828 and ten years later was consolidated with that of Cokesbury. This school stood on lot 27 almost opposite the present firehouse. The public school succeeded the academy about 1850 and was made a part of the present school system in 1871.

Abingdon also boasted of being the home of the first newspaper published in the county. In 1805 Daniel P. Ruff established the ABINGDON PATRIOT, a small four-page weekly publication, which served for a number of years as a local news and advertising media for lower Harford. This paper is said to have published several valuable historical pamphlets about 1806, but none seems to have been preserved.

Black Horse

Situated about four miles northwest of Jarrettsville is the crossroads hamlet of Black Horse. This small village has had an eventful history. It was located on or near the large expanse of land originally called "The Barrens," and was in the midst of several farms later owned by the Henderson family.

Early in the nineteenth century, the 200-acre tract at the crossroads was purchased by Robert Henderson and included the land upon which the old inn stood. This early tavern was on the main road from York to Baltimore, and because of its location, it did a thriving business serving travelers as they journeyed between the two cities.

There is a difference of opinion as to how the name originated. Some believe it came from the fact that the Hendersons owned a team of black horses, but it seems likely that the first innkeeper chose "Black Horse" for his wayside sign. A few years ago, the old sign with its painted black horse was found. Through the efforts of the late J. Alexis Shriver, it was restored and now hangs at its original spot to remind those who pass of a long-ago historic landmark.

A hundred yards from the inn was the McKendree Methodist Episcopal Church, and adjoining it on the east was the site of the first neighborhood public school. The second schoolhouse was erected on a lot nearer the crossroads when our present school system originated. The construction of the building was due to the efforts of John R. Kirkwood who lived near Black Horse and served as one of Harford's first School Commissioners in 1865. That Black Horse was a rural center of trade a hundred years ago is indicated by the fact that in addition to the inn, the church, and the school, it had a store, a wheelwright shop, and a blacksmith shop.

The site of the old hotel remained in the Henderson family for more than 150 years. The present house, now owned by Mr. and Mrs. Howard Luckey, was remodeled from the old building in 1849 by the Rev. Thomas Henderson, a grandson of the original owner. This venerable gentleman was one of the most scholarly men of Harford County. At one time he conducted a classical school in Baltimore, and continued with such a school at Black Horse for many years. The writer remembers him for his forceful sermons at McKendree Church and for the fact that it was said that he could teach seven different languages.

Churchville

From the time of the first settlement in the area, the present Churchville was called Lower Cross Roads to distinguish it from Upper Cross Roads in west Harford. In 1782 Lower Cross Roads is mentioned as one of the places voted for in the election to determine the location of the new county seat. In an Act of Assembly for laying out of roads in 1791, a new road is designated from "Bel Air to Rock Run via of Lower Cross Roads."

In the court records of 1800, providing for the division of the county into districts, it is mentioned as "Herbert's Cross Roads."¹ This name, used for a quarter of a century, was due to the fact that extensive adjoining lands were then owned by the Herbert family. In 1825 when the Churchville Presbyterian Church was incorporated, we find in land records, "A meeting of the members of Churchville Presbyterian Church situated at Herbert's Cross Roads convened on May 7, 1825."²

It is believed that the present name of Churchville originated at that date and probably came from the fact that the Presbyterian Church was located at the crossroads. Maps published by Herrick in 1858 and Martenet in 1878 designate the town as Churchville. The map of 1858 shows a store at the crossroads in a plot now on church grounds, a large hotel owned by Col. William F. Hanna on Calvary Road, a wheelwright shop, and a blacksmith shop. It also locates residences belonging to the Rev. William
