DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The stone farmhouse commonly referred to as Rock Run Sanctuary is situated amid thick woodlands on a steep slope overlooking Rock Run Road and Rock Run Creek below. The two-story building with full basement is constructed entirely of uncoursed rubble fieldstone, quoined at its four corners with larger, rectangular chunks of granite. Its gable roof is sheathed in slate shingles, and the exterior woodwork and trim are painted white.

The three-bay east and principal entrance facade is articulated on the basement level by a central doorway flanked by two windows, all sheltered by the lower level of a two-story porch which extends the length of the facade. Both levels of the porch rest on four post supports with half posts engaged to the wall a few inches from the corner of the building. The three-paneled basement door is recessed the full 21" thickness of the stone walls. The jambs are formed by undifferentiated planks of wood with a plain surround and the lintel is a plain board about 4" wide. The windows are boarded up but are characterized by simple, molded timber surrounds but they differ in size and configuration: the north-east window is 6/6 double hung sash (probably replacement) while the southeast window is 3' wide but only 2'6" high. A masonry water table, about 2' in height, runs along this cellar wall facade.

Correspondingly, the first floor level also contains a central door flanked by two windows. The porch here is characterized by plank flooring and a railing consisting of four horizontal boards, and it is topped by a shed roof with clipped ends. This three-panel door, recessed only half the thickness of the wall, rests on a granite sill and is adorned with a 3 1/2" wide timber surround where the jambs are mortised and pegged into the lintel. The inside edge of these three members is beaded. Though the windows are blocked up it is possible to ascertain that they are identically detailed: simple molded timber surrounds (two fillets separated by a cyma) and slightly projecting sills.

The second story contains two similarly treated windows positioned over the first story fenestration. Abutting the top of their surrounds is the boxed cornice topped by a fillet molding beneath a shallow eave.

On the south gable end of the building a small, squarish window with simple timber surround pierces the pediment. Neither glazing nor sash remains; the attic area is thus vulnerable to the homesteading of bees and birds. A rakeboard corresponding in width to the boxed cornice ornaments both gable ends just under the eaves. The north gable end is undifferentiated except for the end chimney protruding above the roof; this portion is executed in brick and features a corbelled cap.

The west, or rear, facade, also three bays wide, faces up the hillside and is characterized on the first story by a door flanked by two windows.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The following information is quoted from material collected by Paul Penrod in 1976. The title search attached was also executed by him at that time.

This structure is located on a section of the huge parcel known as "Land of Promise," a 2,000-acre patent from 1684 belonging to Thomas Taylor. In 1735, the tract was conveyed to Jacob Giles, Sr., though a portion of it passed to William Perkins who bequeathed 157 acres to his son Reuben in 1767; Reuben in turn sold this acreage to Nathaniel Giles in 1773. (The influential Giles family was instrumental in the eighteenth century development of the Darlington-Deer Creek area.)

Late in the century, Gerrard Gover acquired this particular section of "Land of Promise." The 1798 Tax List noted Samuel Gover owned a 40' X 40' two-story stone house (probably a direct predecessor to the present stone house) with frame outbuildings in a 515-acre estate. Samuel's family was also locally prominent; his daughters Elizabeth, Margaret, Hannah, Susan and Caroline, operated an area boarding school until 1825 when fire destroyed it.

The present stone house was subsequently bought by John Archer whose name appears on the 1878 Martenet map as the owner of the property. The final owner before DNR acquisition was the Maryland Ornithological Society, which used the property as a retreat.

This modest stone farmhouse, another fine example of circa 1800 rural domestic architecture in Harford County, remains structurally intact, in useable condition. Picturesquely sited, it could easily be converted into a wildlife information center by DNR.

The doorway is sheltered by a shed-roofed porch with clipped ends sheathed in slate and resting on two rectangular post supports. One massive granite slab step precedes the plank floored porch. The three-panel door is fashioned like the first floor doorway opposite it, on a granite sill, recessed about half the wall thickness. Its surround is composed of two molded pieces, an outside projecting fillet, then a wider fascia, abutting a plain jamb. The window surrounds on the first story windows and the corresponding two directly above on the second story are the same as the ones on the front facade and they are also boarded shut.

The interior, entered by the cellar door on the east facade is described on this ground floor level by the following features: a single room approximately 14-1/2' X 20' with apertures as described above only on the east wall; stone work is whitewashed but otherwise untreated; the floor consists of brick laid in a herringbone pattern. At the west end wall is a huge fireplace, quite commodious enough to have been intended for cooking, which is 8-1/2' long extending from the northeast corner to underneath the stairway. Stretching nearly three feet in front of the fireplace opening itself is another large granite slab forming the hearth; above the opening is an impressive monolithic granite lintel measuring 7' 8-1/2" long X 17" wide. The rest of the fireplace is executed in uncoursed rubble stone. Finally this room is characterized by an exposed joist ceiling and a corner stairway consisting of 8 winders, each 2' wide, of which the first three are broken and the rest are rotting.

The first story is also one large room with two windows (3' wide X 4' high) and a central three-panel door on each longitudinal wall with north end wall fireplace and corner staircase. Again there is an exposed joist ceiling, but the flooring here is wood plank, 6" wide. The stone walls are whitewashed. The windows are characterized by one-foot deep reveals and simple timber surrounds. The doors are similarly detailed with planks across the top of the plain surround which appear to be recent. The wooden mantel is unadorned except for a shallow shelf braced by a narrow rectangular strip. This surround abuts the door jamb of the stairway where the winders continue to the second floor. A two-foot wide stone hearth stretches in front of the opening.

On the second floor, partitions divide the space into three rooms, the largest of which is approximately 11' X 14-1/2' and entered via the same corner staircase. There is a hole for a stove flue on the north wall in a position corresponding with the fireplaces below. A closet, 2' deep X 1-1/2' wide is located in the northeast corner. Equal sized windows light this room from either side; detailed like those on the first floor they possess 1' wide plank sills. The pine floor boards on this story are about 1' wide and appear to be original. A doorway from this first room lends to the second room which leads to the third, both about 9' X 7' and lit by a window each on front and back respectively.

Proceeding via the stair, one finds that the attic possesses 1' wide plank flooring and at this level the chimney at the north end is executed in brick. The window at the south gable end is about 2' X 2'. The rafters fit flush into the plate atop the stone walls.

Several hundred yards beyond the house is a former bird shelter that was apparently once a barn. The walls have long since been covered with undergrowth and only the foundation remains.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This two-story dwelling is built into a hillside and faces towards the east. The walls are constructed of uncoursed rubble stone, with quoins and stone lintels and sills. It is three openings across on the eastern and western facades, but the only window on the ends is located on the southern side at attic level. The cellar is totally exposed on the eastern side due to the slope, also being three bays across. The windows are 6 X 6, with the exception of one cellar window near the southeast corner, which is 3 X 3. A water table, about two feet in height, runs along this same cellar wall. Two doors are situated on the eastern side; one on the first floor, and one underneath this where the cellar is. A third entrance is located on the western wall just opposite the eastern first floor entrance. The roof is gable-flank, covered with wood shingles and trimmed with a box cornice. Most of the roof has been replaced. A three-bay, double-deck porch is located on the eastern side, complete with a hip roof. A single brick chimney with a corbeled cap is located on the northern inside end.

Several hundred yards beyond the house is a former bird shelter that was apparently once a barn. The walls have long since been covered with undergrowth and only the foundation remains.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This structure probably dates from the late Eighteenth or the early Nineteenth Century. The cellar contained the area used for the kitchen. The tract where the house sits upon is part of the parcel called "Land of Promise", patented at 2000 acres by Col. Thomas Taylor in 1684. It came into the hands of Jacob Giles, Sr., in 1735, although some of it was also owned by William Perkins. William left 157 acres of the tract to his son, Reuben, in 1767 and this was acquired by Nathaniel Giles in 1773. The Giles' were among the first to develop the Darlington-Deer Creek area. This particular section of "Land of Promise" was conveyed to Gerrard Gover in the latter part of the 1700's. The 1798 Tax List mentions that Samuel Gover owned a 40 X 40 two-story stone house with wood outbuildings, as well as 515 acres, making this structure a possible candidate. In the early 1820's, the daughters of Samuel Gover; Elizabeth, Margaret, Hannah, Susan and Caroline, operated an area boarding school which lasted until 1825 when the building burned. The building under discussion was later bought by John Archer, whose name still appears on the 1878 Martenet map as the owner. The last owner was the Maryland Ornithological Society, which used the property as a retreat.

Dear Mr. Penrod:

Mr. Gene Cheers has sent me a copy of your letter of May 3 to him regarding the Holman House at Lapidum. I have been skeptical of its being a lockhouse for the canal since it appears to me by its construction to post-date the canal by at least 50 years. I would very much like to see your documentation since it sounds rather compelling.

There is another house in the park which I feel is of greater historical significance than the Holman House and which is in every bit as much need of attention. It is a two story stone house which stands off Rock Run Road perhaps 1/2 mile up from the river. It was most recently used by the Ornithological Society of Maryland as a retreat. I would judge its construction date to be late 18th-early 19th century. The roof framing, and possibly the wood shingles appear to be original with tapered cornices and rafters. The original interior partitions are intact, though covered with plaster. There is a warming fireplace, unaltered, in the first floor and a cooking fireplace with stilliard in the basement. The house has no electrical or modern plumbing service. It is, in short, an unaltered example of early national vernacular architecture.

I would very much like to meet with you and perhaps Mrs. Viele at the park to further discuss these and other historical resources in the near future. Please call or write me at your convenience.

Sincerely yours,

Ross M. Kimmel
