DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Little Falls Friends Meeting House is located on the east side of Old Fallston Road (Maryland Route 152) at its junction with Reckford Road in Fallston, Harford County, Maryland.

Constructed in 1843, it is a sprawling one-story stone structure with shallow-pitched gable roof and a shed-roofed porch across the west and south facades. The walls are of random-coursed fieldstone laid with large granite quoins and brick jack arches over the windows.

The west (main) facade is five bays across with two double doors filling the central bay. This entrance is flanked on either side by two 12/12, double-hung sash windows with three-panel shutters. Each leaf of the doors has four panels, three horizontal ones above a vertical. There is a four-light transom above each set of doors. The porch has square, chamfered posts resting on a concrete floor. The porch roof and the main roof are sheathed with slate shingles.

The south end is wide, but contains only two bays, a 12/12 window on the west and a double door with transom on the east. This facade has been stuccoed but two datestones in the gable remain visible. The larger stone reads 1843, while the smaller stone above reads 1773. The latter was saved from the earlier meeting house, which was taken down when this one was built. The shed-roofed porch continues around the south end and at the east end of it is a privy with a four-panel door opening onto the porch. This frame structure, covered with clapboards, is now used for storage. Steps lead from the porch to the ground in front of the door; below this east end of the porch and privy, a small basement has been carved out for the modern furnace.

The east facade, overlooking the cemetery, has two windows centered in the end wall.

The north end has a window to the west and door to the east identical to those on the south end. A datestone of 1843 is located in the gable. There is a frame privy to the east of the door and an entrance porch sheltering both the door to this and the door to the meeting house. This privy has clapboards on the north and west sides, but vertical board siding on the east. It has a batten ~~door~~ and appears later than the privy on the south end.

A brick stove chimney rises from the gable peak at each end of the building. A modern brick furnace fence stands to the east of the original chimney at the south end; it was constructed flush with the wall without disturbing the stonework or stucco. Each of these 12/12 sash windows has a good; they are the only windows without shutters. This facade is also stuccoed. A small, modern frame shed has been built against the south end of this wall.

The interior of the meeting house is divided into two spaces by two pulley-operated, counter-balanced horizontal board partitions. The bottom half of the partition slides down into horizontal board wainscoting while the upper panel slides up through the ceiling into the attic. The south room was for the men, the north for women.

The ceiling is probably a later alteration and is composed of narrow unpainted boards. The original wide board floors remain but are concealed by a wall-to-wall floor covering.

Each side of the meeting house has a series of benches on graduated risers facing the front (east). At the front of the rooms facing west, are three shorter benches on two risers which were for the elders.

The benches are original. In the east corner of the south room is a corner cupboard built for the storage of books. Although not built in, it has been here a long while and is filled with old books. Narrow strips of wood are nailed several inches apart on either side of the cupboard, allowing the shelf height to be adjusted. The bookcase is about seven feet tall and has two five-panel doors.

Behind the meeting house is a cemetery which dates from the earlier structure on this site. The first graves here are unmarked as was the custom among Quakers at that time. The earliest marker is that of William Amos, founder of Little Falls Meeting. Amos was buried at his farm, but his body and slate marker were later moved to the cemetery. The inscription reads: Wm. Amos d. 1759. A later memorial stone is inscribed William Amos of England. A cast-iron fence surrounds the graveyard, containing about an acre and a half.

To the south of the meeting house is a one-story frame structure with gable roof built in three sections. The easternmost addition was put on during the renovation of the building in 1975 (James T. Wollon, Jr., Architect). The central section was added after 1898, and the original was built in the 1850s as a school.

The mid-19th century school building consists of one large room with three bays on the south facade and two on the north and west. The east wall was taken out when the 1898 addition was made. This section is covered with clapboards and rests on a rough stone foundation. Batten shutters have been restored to the structure based on an old shutter found under the building. Windows have 6/6 sash. The entrance on the south now consists of one batten door sheltered by a shed-roofed porch with rough log posts on a concrete base. There was originally another door immediately to the right of the present one; this was apparently removed when the first addition was made as the opening is covered with the same boarding found used on that section. An exterior chimney of brick on a concrete foundation is situated between the two earlier parts on the south facade. A metal stove pipe extends from the top of the brick stack which is broad with stepped bricks at the roofline and a plain narrower stack above and below.

The post-1898 portion is a one-bay structure sheathed with German siding and sitting on a concrete block foundation. The 6/6 windows here also have new batten shutters. The 1975 addition contains a kitchen and two bathrooms and is slightly wider than the earlier sections. It sits on a concrete block foundation and is covered with clapboards. ; smaller windows have matching batten shutters.

The interior of the 1850s and post-1898 sections are one open space with two chamfered posts and a foot-high plaster wall at the ceiling marking the former outside east wall of the earlier section. The floor of the addition was at platform level until it was lowered in the recent renovation. The woodwork in both sections is very plain, though different in form. The most interesting thing about the interior is the gently arched ceiling. The story goes that the teacher in the 1850s insisted on a vaulted ceiling so he could teach astronomy. This vaulted ceiling was extended into the post-1898 section when it was built.

Stored in the school building is a wood stove that was used in the meeting house. It is a cast-iron pot-bellied stove. Molded into the iron is the following: "Champion N^o 132, The Wehrle Co., Makers, Newark, Ohio."

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

SIGNIFICANCE

Little Falls Friends Meeting house is a fine example of the Quaker architecture of the area comprised of southeastern Pennsylvania, northern Maryland, and northern Virginia. It is the largest one-story meeting house to survive in Maryland and retains all its original details (except perhaps the ceiling). It has the characteristic features of the Friends' meeting houses, including two entrance doors and a sliding partition dividing the interior into the men's and women's sides.

Little Falls Meeting had a school connected with it from circa 1749 until the early 20th century. At one time this Meeting ran as many as three Quaker schools simultaneously. The school building survives here as a reminder of this Meeting's continuing interest in education.

The Little Falls Meeting itself dates from the mid-18th century. It was founded by William Amos, a Harford County man who determined his own religious beliefs and, when he found they coincided with those of the Quakers, began the Meeting here. Amos is buried in the graveyard here.

HISTORY

Quakerism flourished in Virginia and Maryland between 1655 and 1775, when many Friends moved from Pennsylvania. Friends settled on the Western Run of Gunpowder River before 1675 and formed a monthly meeting in 1739. Friends met at Patapsco Forest on the Little Falls of Gunpowder River in Harford County in 1747. A handwritten account, "The Yearly, Quarterly, and Particular Meetings of the People Called Quakers in the Several Provinces of America", written in 1762, shows the Little Falls Meeting to be under the care of the Gunpowder Monthly Meeting.

The Little Falls Meeting appears to have been in operation long before the Monthly Meeting here was formed in 1815. In his History of Harford County, Preston writes:

William Amos, a resident, large land owner and officer in the militia of that county, was walking on his premises one Sabbath morning, when his meditations and their effect upon his mind were of that character that he called worship. Here he afterwards resorted from a sense of conviction and found satisfaction in the continuing of the practice. Finally, being joined by several of his neighbors, upon comparing notes and making inquiries, they found their views on religious matters coincided with Friends, and going twenty miles to the meeting at Gunpowder, in Baltimore County and their case being favorably considered by that body, they were taken into membership. (p.195).

In 1749 Thomas Bond conveyed part of "Bond's Forest" to be laid out near the road including a house now built intended for a Meeting House for people called Quakers, to worship God in, and also a school house already built. The first meeting house on this site at Fallston was a small log cabin, which was used until 1773 when a stone building was erected. The present house was built in 1843 and incorporates the datestone of the 1777 house along with its own.

In a survey conducted by the Yearly Meeting at Lombard Street in 1853, the Little Falls Meeting is shown to have had 53 Quaker children and three schools, all of which were taught by Friends. In 1871 Little Falls is listed as one school of three in the Baltimore Quarterly Meeting. (Forbush: 1972; p. 54).

Little Falls is a Hicksite Meeting, being a part of those Quakers greatly influenced by the preaching of Elias Hicks, who journeyed through this area between 1797 and 1829. He advocated Christian rationalism combined with the Quietist emphasis on the Inner Light. Elias Hicks could not admit that all parts of the Bible were divinely inspired. He insisted that people could not know the holy scriptures unless they first recognized the spirit of God in themselves.

The Hicksites were in a position to attract individuals who could not accept the fundamentalist view of the Bible, but Bliss Forbush states that :

a weakness of the Hicksites was their heterogeneous nature. Many members had no settled convictions concerning Quakerism. Most were birthright members and, out of habit, conformed to the customs of the Quietist period. They were united in desiring to maintain these customs, recoiled from what seemed to them to be the intolerance of all orthodoxy and held to the doctrine of the Inner Light. They more slowly moved away from their Quietist ways, enlarged their previous religious and philanthropic activities, but being less aggressive, did not grow in numbers until the modern time. (p.69).

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This is a one story, stone masonry building, 5 bays by 2. The center bay consists of double doors separated by a post. Each door leads into a separate room which is used for women's meetings and men's meetings. The roof is of slate and has narrow, plain eaves. There is a chimney at each inside gable end. These are of brick and are flush inside. Two new brick flues at either end rise outside the walls. A one story porch extends around the south and west sides, and it is paved with stone and brick. Windows are 12 lights over 12 and have shutters with moulded panels.

Inside, the meeting house is panelled and the customary meeting house partition consists of two panelled sections counter balanced between two posts. The panels divide so that the upper panel slides up into an area between the ceiling and the roof, the lower panel drops down into a space below floor level, opening the area up into one room.

Fallston Friends School House HA - 610

This little frame school house is covered with hand split boards measuring approximately 4 feet long. The overlap is uneven and measures approximately 4 inches. The rectangular building faces south. It has a low pitched, slate covered roof, which is gable flank. The building is one story, and 3 bays by 2. An addition to the north is the same height and width but is 2 bays by 1. An exterior brick chimney rises out of the south wall. This accomodates a Stove inside. Windows are 6 lights over 6. There is a Shed roofed entrance porch over the south door way.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The significance of this building lies in its antiquity as an organized Quaker meeting, and architecturally, as an excellent example of typical Quaker architecture of Pennsylvania and northeastern Maryland. It is in its original condition save for the addition of utilities.

Quakerism flourished in Virginia and Maryland between 1655 and 1775, when many Friends moved from Pennsylvania. Friends settled on the Western Run of Gunpowder River before 1675 and became a Monthly Meeting in 1739. Friends met at Patapsco Forest on the Little Falls of Gunpowder River in Harford County in 1747. Little Falls Monthly Meeting was formed in 1815. A handwritten account, "The Yearly, Quarterly, and Particular Meetings of the People Called Quakers in the Several Provinces of America", written in 1762, shows the Little Falls Meeting to be under the care of the Gunpowder Monthly Meeting.

The Little Falls Meeting appears to have been in operation long before the Monthly Meeting was formed in 1815. Preston tells us in his History of Harford County (p. 195)

"William Amos, a resident, large land owner and officer in the militia of that county, was walking on his premises one Sabbath morning, when his meditations and their effect upon his mind were of that character that he called worship. Here he afterwards resorted from a sense of conviction and found satisfaction in the continuing of the practice. In 1749, Thomas Bond conveyed part of "Bond's Forest" to be laid out near the road including a house now built intended for a Meeting House for people called Quakers, to worship God in, and also a school house already built. The first meeting house on this site at Fallston was a small log cabin which was used until 1773 when a stone building was erected. The present one was built in 1843. At one end of the present building is a datestone of 1777. At the other end is one for 1843.

In a survey conducted by the Yearly Meeting at Lombard Street in 1853, the Little Falls Meeting is shown to have had 53 Quaker children and three schools, all of which were taught by Friends. In 1871, Little Falls is listed as one school of three in the Baltimore Quarterly Meeting. (Forbush: 1972; p.54).

Little Falls is a Hicksite Meeting, being a part of those Quakers greatly influenced by the preaching of Elias Hicks who journeyed through this area between 1797 and 1829.
