The Alexander Bell House is an excellent example of the Queen Anne style country house of the late 19th century. It retains most of its original exterior materials and, true to the style, displays a wide variety of massing, windows, finishes, and details. Although the architect's name is unknown, the designer may have been a Baltimorean because the Bell family was from Baltimore.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Alexander Bell House is a two and a half story Queen Anne style house built about 1880 on the south side of Wheel Road about 1/2 mile west of Emmorton Road near Emmorton, Harford County, Maryland. The main elevation faces north.

The main elevation is typically Queen Anne in its irregular arrangement. Dominating this facade are a turreted tower on the northwest corner and a shingled gable with a stone chimney at the northeast corner. Windows on the ground floor are high and narrow; with the upper portions a single pane surrounded by small squares in one of the typical window patterns of the style. The ground floor is finished in quarry-faced random ashlar stone. The second story is frame with shingles in a scalloped pattern. The gable is outlined with a wide cornice which has a dentil molding. The gable face is shingles in a wave pattern. A shed porch extends across the north and west elevations. It has turned columns and perforated brackets. The cornice has a dentil molding trim.

The west elevation's principal features are the corner tower and a stone chimney which is flush with the wall surface. Quarter round windows flank the chimney.

The south elevation is the rear of the house and has a small frame shed addition. A third stone chimney is on this side, with the same quarter round windows. In the angle between the west and south gable sections is a projecting bay window on the first floor, facing south. Two eyebrow dormers break the roof on each section.

The east elevation also has a projecting bay on the ground floor. An arched window on the second floor and a hooded gable window also provide variety on this facade. The foundation is stone and the roof is slate.

About 60 feet south of the house is the former carriage house, which was altered in the 1920's and 1940's. Parts of its exterior still retain the original board and batten siding. The alterations converted the building to servants' quarters.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Alexander Bell House is an excellent example of the Queen Anne style country house of the late 19th century. It retains most of its original exterior materials and, true to the style, displays a wide variety of massing, windows, finishes, and details. Although the architect's name is unknown, the designer may have been a Baltimorean because the Bell family was from Baltimore.

Alexander Bell acquired the property in 1879 from the neighboring McHenry estate, Monmouth Farm (HA-703-712). Elizabeth Archer purchased the estate in 1935. In a 1962 deed between members of the Archer family, the farm was mentioned as "formerly known as Windy Walls, now known as Arlee Park Farm."

The house is now owned by a development company which has preliminary plans to renovate it as the community center for a planned subdivision called "Country Walk".

Note: This form consolidates information on the carriage house, formerly numbered HA-714.

This small frame building has been altered twice.

Once a coach house about 10' x 16', frame covered by board and batten, the ridgepole runs north south. A carriage door was on the south end, now closed off. There were two windows on each side, one on the north into a tack room.

The unlighted loft was changed about 1920 into the upper story of a small servants' house, with windows & lights on two sides added. Two ^{east} ~~west~~ side, one on each end.

An addition was made about 1942 as a frame clapboard section about 8' wide ~~extended~~ along the west side of the house, adding rooms upstairs and down under a lean-to roof reaching to the old ridgepole.
