DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The main house faces the southwest, as does the kitchen wing, which is connected to the main house via a stucco breezeway. Originally, the kitchen and the house were two separate structures. The main house is of coursed rubble stone and is of one-and-one-half stories. (The structure was originally two and one-half stories.) The corners are quoined with large stone blocks, and such large stones and keystones rest overtop the window lintels as well. The bays are five by two, with a thru hall and doors directly opposite each other on the north and south faces of the structure. A third door is located near the southwest corner of the main house, almost flush with the recent breezeway addition. Most of the doors, window frames and hardware have been replaced. The windows are 9 X 6, although the attic-level windows on the eastern end are 6 X 6 and are smaller. The corresponding windows on the western end are even smaller and are 2 X 2. There are two large cellar windows, located on either side of both entrances and these are either louvered or 3 X 3's. There were two such windows on the eastern end of the house, but one of these has since been covered over. The southerly door has a three-light transom and massive stone steps before it. The northerly door is covered by a one-bay shed-roofed porch. Cellar entrances are located near the northeast and the northwest corners of the house, the northeastern one once having a stone enclosure. There are three gabled dormers on either side of the wood-shingled, gable-flank roof. The dormer windows are 6 X 6. The original brick chimneys are quite tall and thick, with all of them being inside ends and located on the sides of the roof. Two are on the western end and are parallel, while the third is on the southeast corner. The new trim consists of a box cornice with a frieze and angled-in ends. A special feature is a stone near the gable of the eastern end inscribed "A. J. 1821".

The kitchen wing, constructed of the same stone, is a short two stories, with a recently refurbished wood-shingled hip roof as well as a new box cornice and soffit. There are no windows on the western end of the kitchen. Extended remodeling has resulted in the connection of this structure with the house via the new stucco breezeway, which is really another addition. There are two 6 X 6 windows on each story on the south side, and a tall brick inside end chimney stands on the west end. The northern side of the kitchen, where there is now a large window and a four-bay shed-roofed porch, was once a half-enclosed barn with a shed roof which was removed in 1940. The kitchen door is located on the northern facade beneath the new porch, and this entire side of the building is frame. The cellar under the main house is still subdivided with stone walls and retains much of the old pegging and hand-hewn beams.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This home is one of the older homes in the area in and around Susquehanna State Park and is said to have been built by John and Nathaniel Hughes in 1773. The tract itself, "Friendship", was patented in 1745 by Stephen Onion and consisted of 600 acres. The house was originally of two and one-half stories with a detached kitchen (as pointed out by the specifics on the 1798 tax list). Between 1808 and 1811, a disgruntled slave fired the original second story and the house was reconstructed in its present form during the 1820's.

The building is among those being surveyed by Dr. Cary Carson of the St. Mary's City Commission as an example of transitional architecture in Maryland.

The only original outbuilding is the pumphouse, which is situated just southwest of the kitchen. This is a tall, thin, two-storied structure of the same stone as the house, with a new wood-shingled gable-front roof. The pumphouse has box cornices and eaves, as well as an original brick chimney, located on the inside end of the southwest corner of the roof. The bays are one by one, with the first floor windows being louvered and the second story ones being 2 X 2 windows. One board and batten door is located on the northeast side while a second is sited on the upper level on the southwest side. There are still several support beams that protrude from the wall.
