This farmhouse may be built in part of logs. Fenestration patterns indicate that two parts to the house are under one roof. ~~Both have 2 stories.~~ Both have 2 stories. Facing south, the A-roof ridgepole runs east west. The east section is 3 bays by 0 with a chimney inside the east end wall, a one-story porch on the south. The west section has lower ceilings than the rest of the house and a low second-floor window characteristic of log houses in this area. One bay long, there is no window in the west end wall upstairs, but a door on the first floor. A chimney rises from the point at which an exterior drum-stick chimney would rise from a large cooking fireplace.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

This rather plain house now covered with asphalt shingles over clapboard, is included in the inventory because it seems likely that the west end may have a log house buried within the walls.
