

Joseph and Mary Johnson House
HA 946

This two story stone house is located on the south side of Green Marble Road in the village of Cardiff, Maryland. Most likely built in the mid-nineteenth century, this house is an example of a vernacular Welsh building form brought by immigrating quarrymen, a representative structure indigenous to the Snowdonia Region in northwest Wales. Squat stone houses such as these are referred to as "Coulsonstown cottages" due to the nearby, historically documented Welsh settlement just over the Mason-Dixon line on Ridge Road, south of the slate ridge.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

This two story Welsh stone house is located on the south side of Green Marble Road in the village of Cardiff, Maryland. As typical of the "Coulsonstown cottage" building form, this structure is three bays wide, of a center hall plan, and of moderate depth. The coarse Cardiff conglomerate stone walls, massive block quoins and lintels, and shallow pitch slate roof are also indicative of this transplanted Welsh vernacular structural form. A rear two story gable roof projection is not original to the house¹.

The main entrance is located at the middle bay of the north, main facade with single windows at the first story outer bays. Three windows in the second story are aligned with the first story bays. Main facade windows are 2/2 sash. Centered on the gable ends are two internal flues with substantial brick chimneys. A single 6/6 window is located on a gable end, at the left end's forward upper position. The rear elevation is shrouded by the two story projection.

The interior space of this house suffers from vandal/fire damage and is in the early stages of reconstruction. Rough frame walls divide both first and second floors into small rooms and a second floor hall. Interestingly, the first riser of the central stair is begun at the rear of the first level, leading forward to the second floor.

¹As evidenced by the 1888 Delta map, a birdseye view of all structures in the adjoining towns of Delta, South Delta (Cardiff), and West Bangor.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Most likely built in the mid-nineteenth century, this house is an example of a vernacular Welsh building form brought by immigrating quarrymen, a representative structure indigenous to the Snowdonia Region in northwest Wales. Squat stone houses such as these are referred to as "Coulson town cottages" due to the nearby, historically documented Welsh settlement just over the Mason-Dixon line on Ridge Road, south of the slate ridge. Cardiff contains four Welsh stone structures within its village boundaries.

This house is a simple two story structure built of the region's Cardiff conglomerate. Proportionally, these example Welsh houses remain constant, with a rectangular three bay center hall plan with central entrance and outer windows, and either two or three aligned windows in the second story. The shallow gable roofs are generally shingled in the region's renowned slate. Common to these structures are also massive quoins and single block lintels.

According to Vera Ingoal, the first road in the settlement of Cardiff is today's Slate Ridge/Green Marble Road and was originally known as "Stone Row". Supplementary evidence of this settlement pattern is made apparent from Martenet's 1878 map, which does not show Delta's Main Street extending through Cardiff, and the 1888 Delta map, which shows the later linear development occurring along Main Street from the intersection at Slate Ridge/Green Marble Road. Apparently, Cardiff was originally established as an insular Welsh enclave at the base of the slate ridge, like Coulson town, with a single path to the slate quarries.

The village of Cardiff developed on the patented land tract of Thomas Hawkins called "Hawkins Chance". The 74 acre parcel was divided and sold by the Hawkins family to Welsh immigrants in the mid-eighteen hundreds for the purpose of slate quarrying.
