HO-1016
Forest Diner
10031 Baltimore National Pike
Private

Description:

The Forest Diner is located on the south side of the road near Ellicott City in eastern Howard County, Maryland. The Diner is a one-story, eleven-bay by seven-bay frame structure with an uneven gable roof that has asphalt shingles, an east-west ridge, and a longer slope on the north side. There is a three-bay by five-bay frame wing on both the east and west ends, and they are set back two bays from the front of the main block and have a lower roof with the same profile as the main block. The north elevation has a stone ashlar planter box across the front, with concrete wall below eleven six-over-one sash and T1-11 siding above the windows. There are canvas awnings around the north, east, and west sides of the building. Above the north awning is a red neon sign, and there is red neon around the edge of the eaves. The west wing also has six-over-one sash, and there is brick veneer at the north end. The entrance is double doors in the north bay of the west elevation of the main block. The east wing is covered by modern decks, mechanical equipment, ducts, awnings, and an exterior brick chimney. The south elevation has a CMU wall on the bottom half with T1-11 siding above. The east end has mechanical equipment added and a shed-roofed frame addition with no openings.

Significance:

The Forest Diner was opened in 1946 by Bob Gearhart who placed a 40-seat dining car on the property, and it was named Gearhart's Diner at that time. In 1957 the diner was sold to William Carl Childress, who apparently started the Forest Motel next door in 1960, and the name was probably changed around that time. The present state of the diner reflects the move of the traditional road-side diner from a traditional stainless steel trailer to a more permanent building in contemporary materials. This transition seems to have occurred in the 1960s and 1970s, before a backlash brought back the stainless steel diner. This building has little or no architectural significance, but has social significance as a traditional eatery and meeting place for Howard Countians and is typical of such institutions prior to the rapid growth of upscale Columbia. The Forest Diner is scheduled to be demolished in a few years for redevelopment of the site.
