1750

Old Oakland Manor faces west on the east side of Hyla Brook Road, midway between the entrances to The Mending Wall and Pasture Gate Lane.

It is a five bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, gabled roof (running north-south) stone (measuring some 50 x 25 feet, featuring stone quoining and flat stone lintels) house, constructed on a stone foundation, with two wide brick chimneys inset into its north and south walls and a two and a half story high, three bay wide, gabled roof, central portico taking up the three central bays of its west facade. The portico is held by four square posts and two half posts and is surmounted by a pediment holding a four-light bull's eye.

Fenestration for the building is vertically aligned. Windows on the west facade are rectangular, double casement windows, holding six-six lights, underlined by wooden sills and surmounted by wide, extended, flat stone lintels. A small basement window, surmounted by a flat stone lintel, is found in the north end bay, vertically aligned to the first and second floor window of this bay.

Four, wide, stone steps lead to the three bay wide, cement landing of the entrance portico, covering the central rectangular, paneled, entrance door, which is flanked by fluted pilasters and surmounted by a flat, wooden lintel, decorated with a pediment. A small, rectangular, second floor, six-light casement window is vertically aligned to this entrance.

The north and south walls are similar, holding only two square, attic, four light, windows, the west bay windows of which are vented. Believed by some local historians to be the original Oakland Manor, this building is now surrounded by the neighborhood of the Birches in the new town of Columbia. Local folklore relates that the building was once used as a garrison for soldiers. This story is very plausible for during the tenure of Colonel George K. Gaither, as master of Oakland Manor, a staunch Confederate, troops were quartered in the area. Colonel Gaither reviewed "Gaither's Troopers" in front of the new manor house, which was constructed in 1827 by Robert Oliver, and which was located southwest of this old building on the opposite side of Governor Warfield Parkway.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Old Oakland Manor faces west on the east side of Hyla Brook Road, mid-way between the entrances to The Mending Wall and Pasture Gate Lane.

It is a five bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, gabled roof (running north-south) stone (measuring some 50 x 25 feet, featuring stone quoining and flat stone lintels) house, constructed on a stone foundation, with two wide brick chimneys inset into its north and south walls and a two and a half story high, three bay wide, gabled roof, central portico taking up the three central bays of its west facade. The portico is held by four square posts and two half posts and is surmounted by a pediment holding a four-light bull's eye.

THE WEST ELEVATION

Fenestration for the building is vertically aligned. Windows on the west facade are rectangular, double casement windows, holding six-six lights, underlined by wooden sills and surmounted by wide, extended, flat stone lintels. A small basement window, surmounted by a flat stone lintel, is found in the north end bay, vertically aligned to the first and second floor window of this bay.

Four, wide, stone steps lead to the three bay wide, cement landing of the entrance portico, covering the central rectangular, paneled, entrance door, which is flanked by fluted pilasters and surmounted by a flat, wooden lintel, decorated with a pediment. A small, rectangular, second floor, six-light casement window is vertically aligned to this entrance.

THE NORTH AND SOUTH ELEVATIONS

The north and south walls are similar, holding only two square, attic, four light, windows, the west bay windows of which are vented.

THE EAST ELEVATION

The east elevation is similar to the west elevation, holding two north and south bay, double casement, six-six light windows, underlined by projecting flat wooden sills and surmounted by flat stone lintels on each side of a central rectangular, entrance door. The central bay holds a smaller, four light, rectangular, square, second floor window, surmounted by a flat stone lintel.

The interior features a central hall of some seven feet in width, with a large, first and second floor, twenty feet by twenty feet room, originally placed on each side of the hall, but now partitioned. Only the attic staircase is original to the building, which was gutted sometime prior to 1950 when it was restored by Mr. and Mrs. Reich in 1952. At that time, a new roof was put on the building and the building completely restored as we see it today.

This large stone building was surrounded by its dependencies. A stone slave quarters lies only six inches north of the building's north wall and was connected to the main house by an underground passage. Northwest of the stone slave quarters lies the old blacksmith shop, now used as a private residence. Directly west of the mainhouse and facing Wilde Lake is the old sheep barn for the property, now used as a boat house for the Wilde Lake boat dock on which it is now located. Southwest of the house and now located within the Wilde Lake Park, which runs around Wilde Lake, is the old, hipped roof, Stone Spring House for the property, which, as late as 1952, furnished water for the three houses here.

A large barn lies due north of the cluster of houses, facing Wilde Lake and not far from the Boat Dock.

The buildings are all in a good state of repair. The blacksmith shop and slave quarters are individually owned, while the two barns and spring house are located within the Wilde Lake Park area.

Old Oakland Manor is now surrounded on the east, north and south by the neighborhood of the Birches, characterized by single family, detached dwelling units and on the west it is bordered by Hyla Brook Road and Wilde Lake and its park area.

Since the interior of the building was completely restored in 1952, much of the interior has been altered. The building, however, features its original attic staircase and four fireplaces, two of which are uncovered. The tiles in one of these fireplaces cracked so that in repairing the tile and taking out some six tiles in the fireplace to do so, an old cement slab was uncovered with the date 2 June 1750.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Old Oakland Manor House is significant to Howard County and the State of Maryland architecturally as a fine example of a mid-eighteenth century fieldstone house, which was completely restored in 1952. Little remains of the manor but the attic staircase and the original fireplaces, one of which contains a cement slab with the date 1750. Covered by fireplace tiles, it was discovered when these tiles had to be removed for repair. Several other things point to the strong possibility that this was the Old Oakland Manor House. 1. The use of fieldstone points to the period in which the Old Manor House was constructed. Later, the ashlar granite block construction we find in the 1840's was used for a building of this dimension. 2. The dimensions of the building are significant, 25'x 50', for most of the early stone buildings were of more modest proportions. The manor would have been constructed on a larger scale than the smaller stone buildings, which dot the Howard County landscape. 3. The placement and size of the window openings are of interest. Although vertically aligned, they are not proportionally scaled as we find later. In addition, the smaller openings seem to suggest the use of casement windows, which in Virginia and New England were used very early. 4. No stone sills. By 1840, most stone buildings featured projecting stone sills. 5. Numerous bits and pieces of early pottery and china have been found on the site and have been collected by the present owners.

Historically, Oakland Manor is significant for its association with the Dorseys. It stands on a tract of land called "Dorsey's Adventure", a survey of 1688 by the Honorable John Dorsey. John willed this survey to his grandson, Edward Dorsey. Oakland Manor, should the date of 1750 inscribed on the fireplace stone be correct, must have been constructed by a Dorsey, for local historians relate that in 1785, Colonel John Dorsey sold the property to Luther Martin, Attorney General of Maryland.

In 1827, the property was sold to Robert Oliver, an Englishman who increased the estate. In 1838, George R. Gaither of Baltimore bought "Oakland Manor". It was his son, Colonel George Riggs Gaither, who organized "Gaither's Troopers", which later became a unit of the Confederate Army. During this time, it is believed that the old stone manor house was used to quarter these troops.

Enfolded in folklore with some evidence which would point to its early construction, the Old Oakland Manor is significant to both Howard County and the State of Maryland as a fine example of early stone architecture with a high probability factor of being the early "Oakland Manor" house, constructed here by the Dorsey family.

As an example of early stone architecture, constructed on a larger scale than other stone houses in Howard County, Old Oakland Manor should be considered for inclusion to the National Register of Historic Places, the State Critical Areas Program and any local landmark ordinance the citizens of Howard County may seek to initiate, should its owners so desire.
