DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The facts about the construction of Doughoregan Manor have never been fully established. It is believed that Charles Carroll II built the house about 1727.

The main house, which is about 66-feet long and 30-feet deep, was originally a one-and-a-half story gambrel roofed brick building with two pair of end chimneys. To the north stood a small detached one-story brick family chapel and to the south, a brick kitchen, with servants' quarters. Both of these outbuildings were probably erected around 1780. In the 1830s Charles, V, enlarged and revised these three buildings into their present form. He raised the main house half-story to a full story, making it a two-story structure. The new gable roof was cut off at the top to form a flat deck, which was balustraded and surmounted by an octagonal cupola. The center door of the front (west) facade was sheltered by a new one-story portico with four Doric columns. A similar new portico on the rear (west) elevation had a room above it and on either side a long one-story covered veranda with iron columns and marble floor extended the length of the main house. The chapel to the north was enlarged and its height raised and the remodelled building was joined to the main house by means of a two-story passageway.<sup>1</sup> The kitchen to the south was similarly enlarged and connected to the central block. The resulting new five-part composition, about 300-feet in length, was unified by the addition of wooden walkways to the roofs of the wings and the installation of a octagonal cupola on the central block.

The central house has a center hall plan. The main hall, paneled in oak, extends through from front to rear. The stair is located in a small side hall, situated on the north side of the main hall, adjacent to the east (front) entrance. Beyond the side hall is a library and to the west, the large parlor. On the south side of the main hall are the small parlor, in the southeast corner, and to the west, the dining room. The second floor bedrooms, remodelled in the 1830s, were completely renovated and redecorated around 1915. The estate, containing about 3,000 acres, and house are in excellent condition. The mansion is used as a residence and is not open to visitors.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Doughoregan Manor, was the country home from 1766 to 1832 of Charles Carroll (III) "of Carrollton," a signer of the Declaration of Independence for Maryland, planter, landowner, politician, and U.S. Senator. The Georgian brick plantation house, built about 1727, was greatly enlarged and remodelled in the Greek Revival Style in the 1830's. His favorite country home, Charles Carroll is buried in the family chapel attached to the north end of the mansion.

Brief Sketch of the Life of Charles Carroll (III) of Carrollton, 1737-1832.

Charles Carroll, III, was born at Annapolis, Maryland, September 19, 1737, into a wealthy Roman Catholic family. He was educated by the Society of Jesus in Maryland; he attended the College de St. Omer in French Flanders from 1748 to 1752 and the College de Louis le Grand in Parish from 1753 to 1757. He then went to London for several years, where he continued the study of civil law that he had begun in France. In 1765, at the age of 28, Carroll returned to Maryland and took up the development of the 10,000 acre tract in Frederick County located at the mouth of the Monocary River and known as Carrollton Manor, which his father made over to him at this time. Here in a farmhouse he erected near present-day Buckeytown, Charles Carroll lived the life of a country gentleman of property. In 1765 he began the practice of adding "of Carrollton" to his name to distinguish himself from his father and cousins of the same name.

He took no part in Maryland politics as he was debarred by law from political activity by his legal disability as a Roman Catholic. In 1768 he married his cousin Mary Darnall, by whom he had seven children, three of whom lived to maturity. In 1773 Carroll entered politics when he published a series of letters in Annapolis news - papers. In 1774 and 1775 he was a member of the Annapolis Committee of Correspondence, of the first Maryland convention, of the provincial committee of correspondence and the committee of safety.

8. Significance (1)

Doughoregan Manor House
(Charles Carroll (III) of Carrollton)

Because of his standing among American Catholics and his knowledge of French, the Continental Congress, in February, 1776, appointed Carroll a member of a commission to visit Canada "to promote or form a union" between Canada and the colonies. The mission failed. He was a delegate to the Maryland convention of 1776 and appointed a delegate to the Continental Congress on July 4, 1776. Carroll went almost immediately to Philadelphia, voted for the engrossment of the Declaration of Independence on July 19, and signed the document on August 2. He was a member of the Continental Congress from 1776 to 1779 and a state senator from 1776 to 1804.

In 1787 he was elected to the Constitutional Convention but declined to serve. He favored, however, the adoption of the Constitution. He was chosen a U.S. Senator from Maryland in 1790 and served until 1792, when he resigned this office. In 1804, after he failed to be re-elected to the Maryland senate, he retired from public service at the age of 67. He then devoted his time to the development of an estate that included between 70 and 80,000 acres of land in Maryland, Pennsylvania, and New York. He was a member of the Potomac Company (1785) and of its successor, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal (1823). He was on the first board of directors of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and laid its cornerstone on July 4, 1828. Carroll died at Baltimore on November 14, 1832 and was buried in the family chapel on his country estate, Doughoregan Manor. At the time of his death he was the last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence and believed to be the wealthiest citizen in the United States.

HISTORY OF THE HOUSE

Charles Carroll, I, acquired the 10,000 acres comprising the original Doughoregan Manor in 1717. His son, Charles Carroll, II, is believed to have constructed the main section of the mansion about 1727 and on his death in the 1760's, Doughoregan Manor passed to his son, Charles Carroll III, "the signer." The mansion was the latter's favorite country home. His grandson, Charles Carroll, V, remodelled and enlarged the Georgian house in the Greek Revival style shortly after his grandfather's death in 1832. The estate, now containing about 2,800 acres, is still owned by the Carroll family.

Dear Mr. Carroll:

We are pleased to send you copies of our correspondence concerning the designation of Doughoregan Manor, Ellicott City, Maryland, as a national historic landmark that you requested in phone conversation on July 20, 1977. A redefinition of the boundary of Doughoregan Manor, Maryland, was considered and approved by Secretary of the Interior Cecil Andrus on May 5, 1977. A copy of this special request for boundary adjustment is also enclosed. We hope this will give you the information you need.

Dear Mr. Pearce:

We are enclosing a copy of the redefined boundary for Doughoregan Manor with its verbal description. The new boundary was considered by the Secretary of the Interior's Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings, and Monuments at its 76th meeting April 18-20 in Washington, D.C. The Advisory Board recommended that the proposed change be approved, and this action was taken by Secretary Andrus on May 5, 1977.

We trust that this information will serve to make your file on Doughoregan Manor current.

SPECIAL REQUEST-Boundary Adjustment

Doughoregan Manor National Historic Landmark
Howard County, Maryland

(Country home of Charles Carroll, Signer of the Declaration of Independence)

Doughoregan Manor is still in the Carroll family. When in 1971 Historian Charles Snell met the owner in order to develop a boundary, the latter indicated that he would not like to commit the total property of 2,042 acres to landmark status but would like to leave part of it out for possible future development. A compromise was reached; a boundary that gave protection to the manor house and dependencies and provided screening from future development was drawn. It encompassed about 900 acres.

Since enactment of the 1976 Tax Reform Act, the owner, Mr. Philip Carroll, has changed his mind and wishes to extend landmark status to the entire holding of 2,042 acres. An important consideration is that he is prepared to donate an easement to the Maryland Historical Trust. From the standpoint of this office, the accomplishment of getting the additional 1,000 acres plus of this historic site protected makes the proposed landmark expansion a commendable and supportable action.

We recommend the boundary change as shown on the attached plat and metes and bounds description.
