Woodcamp Farm faces north on the south side of Hardy Road, with the entrance doors on the two northeast corners of the building. It is a Victorian, gabled, frame house with elements of the Queen Anne style. A sister house, of similar design, stands east of Woodcamp Farm.

The frame (covered with German siding) building is large in scale and perfect in proportion, featuring large, intercepting gables with hipped roof, one story high, curved porches on both its northeast and southeast corners. The front porch or north porch is held by six doric columns and is approached by four very wide, poured in place, concrete, steps on its east and north perimeters, which lead to rectangular north entrances.

Fish scaled shingles decorate the upper gable line of the central building block on the south elevation, which holds the large kitchen and its east and south rectangular entrance doors.

The building features simple box cornices with returns, while the roof appears to be of copper, decorated in diagonal squares. Two tall, square brick chimneys rise from the center and north end of the main building block, whose gabled roof runs north-south, intercepted on the east elevation by a wide second floor gable, which holds a rectangular, central, second floor window, beneath which is found a three windowed, first floor, bay window, beneath whose central window is placed the date, "1918". This section also covers a portion of the open front porch.

This house was constructed by William Hardy and is a sister house to another Hardy House, lying east, both of which are located on part of a tract of land called "Additional Defense" and part of another tract called "Range Declined".

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Woodcamp Farm faces north on the south side of Hardy Road, with the entrance doors on the two northeast corners of the building. It is a Victorian, gabled, frame house with elements of the Queen Anne style. A sister house, of similar design, stands east of Woodcamp Farm.

The frame (covered with German siding) building is large in scale and perfect in proportion, featuring large, intercepting gables with hipped roof, one story high, curved porches on both its northeast and southeast corners. The front porch or north porch is held by six doric columns and is approached by four very wide, poured in place, concrete steps on its east and north perimeters, which lead to rectangular north entrances.

The building features simple box cornices with returns, while the roof appears to be of copper, decorated in diagonal squares. Two tall, square brick chimneys rise from the center and north end of the main building block, whose gabled roof runs north-south, intercepted on the east elevation by a wide second floor gable, which holds a rectangular, central, second floor window, beneath which is found a three windowed, first floor, bay window, beneath whose central window is placed the date, "1918". This section also covers a portion of the open front porch.

The placement of apertures on the south elevation is very regular. A central, first floor, rectangular, kitchen entrance is flanked by single, rectangular windows. Above rest two evenly spaced, though not vertically aligned, second floor windows. The curvilinear, hipped roof, open, kitchen porch, which runs along the east and south walls of the large kitchen is held by nine turned posts. Three wide central steps, on the south, lead to the south kitchen entrance, while four wide, poured in place, concrete steps, similar to those for the front porch, lead to the east door of the kitchen.

One further, two story high gabled roof, building block is placed on the west side of the main building block's north wall, off center, but not intercepting.

Barns and outbuildings lie south of the house.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Woodcamp Farm is associated with the Hardy family of Howard County¹ and is a good example of early twentieth century, Victorian architecture, with elements of both the Queen Anne and Shingle styles.² Its continuance as a working farm also makes it important to agriculture.³

1. The land on which Woodcamp Farm was constructed was acquired by James Hardy on February 15, 1909. It comprised parts of "Additional Defense" and "Range Declined" or some 62 1/4 acres. On September 21, 1912 William Hardy acquired a part of this farm, and, in 1918, constructed the present house. His brother, Edward Hardy, constructed a similar house, east of this one, on the same side of the Old Baltimore - Fredericktown Road, now called Hardy Road.

2. The house is a fine example of the best in early twentieth century design. We see a departure from the basic "I", "L" and "T" plans, of the nineteenth century, with its accompanying symmetry and the initiation of cruciform plans, with intersecting gable roofs and dormer windows. American architecture was breaking away from the rigidity of the past. The iconoclastic period, which flourished in the 1920's was also being experienced in the architectural designs of this period. No longer a simple, direct plan, but an attempt to surprise, to innovate and create new patterns. Staircases are set into corners, allowing the remainder of the floor area to be fully used. Entry halls are often eliminated entirely or only formed by entrance door and corner staircase. Bay windows are added to flood in more light and air, as well as to enlarge.

Woodcamp Farm is an example of this period. Its gable insets are shingled, reflecting an element of the shingled style. Its intersecting gables and dormers are reminiscent of the Queen Anne style, while its asymmetrical plan exemplifies the experimental going on in the architecture of that period.

3. This house was constructed on a working farm, which remains so to this day. The large farm has been divided into three large lots, which remain under cultivation, although the pressure of development is felt. It is hoped that this farm will remain operational, despite these pressures.

WOODCAMP FARM (House) is a rather charming frame dwelling of two storeys built in a Victorian gabled cottage design. Its sister house stands but a short distance away.

The approach is at the E.N. end with the entrance doors on the NE corner. There is not a visually full second floor but rather the windows of that level are within gables at all elevations.
