The Ryerson House ("Bessie Hall")
Columbia
Private

Circa 1874

The Ryerson House ("Bessie Hall") faces east on the west side of Cedar Lane 2400 feet south of its intersection with Hickory Ridge Road.

It is a five bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, gabled roof (running north-south) frame structure with square brick chimneys inset into its north and south walls and an intersecting, central gable on its east elevation. This elevation holds a central rectangular, entrance door, flanked by three vertical side lights and surmounted by a four light transom.

Fenestration is rectangular, double-hung, holding two-over-two lights, proportionally scaled, vertically aligned, and decorated with black shutters.

A hipped roof, one story high, open porch runs along this elevation, supported by square wooden posts. A two bay wide, one room deep, two story high, intersecting gable (running east-west) frame kitchen "L" extends from the two north bays of the west wall of the house. Its west wall holds a central, square, brick chimney. Its south wall holds a central, rectangular entrance and a one light, rectangular picture window, east of the door, with two rectangular, second floor windows, with two-over-two lights above. A shed roofed, one story high, enclosed porch runs along the south wall.

Bessie Hall is a good example of Howard County vernacular frame architecture, constructed in an "L" plan by John Wall, circa 1874.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Ryerson House faces east on the west side of Cedar Lane 2400 feet south of its intersection with Hickory Ridge Road.

It is a five bay wide, one room deep, two and a half story high, gabled roof (running north-south) frame structure with square brick chimneys inset into its north and south walls and an intersecting, central gable on its east elevation. This elevation holds a central rectangular, entrance door, flanked by three vertical side lights and surmounted by a four light transom.

Fenestration is rectangular, double-hung, holding two-over-two lights, proportionally scaled, vertically aligned, and decorated with black shutters.

A hipped roof, one story high, open porch runs along this elevation, supported by square wooden posts. A two bay wide, one room deep, two-story high, intersecting gable (running east-west) frame kitchen "L" extends from the two north bays of the west wall of the house. Its west wall holds a central, square, brick chimney. Its south wall holds a central, rectangular entrance and a one light, rectangular picture window, east of the door, with two rectangular, second floor windows, with two-over-two lights above. A shed roofed, one story high, enclosed porch runs along the south wall.

The west bay of this porch has been enclosed to create what once may have been a pantry, whose south wall holds a rectangular, two-over-two light window and is now used as a powder room.

A rectangular entrance lies east of the enclosure with three tall, rectangular eight light windows east of the entrance. The main building block of the house features a central hall with east and west rectangular entrances.

The interior of the Ryerson House features random width floors, cross paneled entrance doors and door and window frames flanked by fluted pilasters, surmounted by fluted lintels, joined by square blocks, decorated with circles. The house has an "L" shaped stone walled basement foundation, indicating the entire house was constructed at one time. The woodwork, interior doors and floors also match throughout the house, a further indication of this.

The front door is of particular interest. On the exterior it is a rectangular, Roman-arched, cross paneled door, while on its interior it is simply a rectangular, cross paneled door. The intersecting front gable once held a Roman-arched, double-hung window, holding two-over-two lights. These two features are representative of the second half of the Nineteenth Century.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Ryerson House ("Bessie Hall") is a good example of Howard County vernacular frame architecture¹, constructed in an "L" plan by John Wall, circa 1874².

EXPLANATORY NOTES:

- The Ryerson House, also known as "Bessie Hall", is typical of the two-story high, gabled roof, farm house with "L" service wing, which was being constructed in Howard County in the second half of the Nineteenth Century. Often these houses featured a central intersecting gable, such as we find here, inset with either a Roman-arched or Gothic-arched attic window. This latter feature, a Roman-arched attic window, has been covered so that it does not appear on the facade, only on the interior. The central, rectangular, cross-paneled doorway for the house also features two top, Roman-arched panels on its exterior, another feature of this period. The house also retains much of its original interior, such as its cross-paneled doors, basic floor plan, staircase, and woodwork, the latter of which is composed of fluted pilasters and lintels joined by square blocks, decorated with circles.
 - This house is situated on land once belonging to a farm given to Amos Dorsey by his father, Eli. The third line of this farm once intersected Lot #3 of the division of real estate of Amos Dorsey, which Lot #3 was on April 8, 1818, conveyed to Charles Worthington and Mary Ann Worthington. On January 20, 1874, 145 acres of the original farm was sold at public auction to John P. Wall. This man is believed to have constructed the present house. He, James Wall and Robert Lilly entered into a petition to create a right-of-way to the public road known as "Cedar Lane", confirmed by Circuit Court of Howard County 30 March, 1880 (5-98). The residence of James Wall is also indicated on the Hopkins' Atlas of 1878, with no direct access to Cedar Lane at that time. By 1883, Pulaski Dorsey acquired the 145 acre farm, willing it to Annie E. Simpson. She, in turn, conveyed it to James Goodman in 1913, who lived there until the time of his death. By 1941, his widow, Pearl Lee Peters and their children, Woodrow Wilson Goodman, Irene Virginia Goodman, Vernon Eugene Goodman, and James Ellis Goodman conveyed the 145 acre farm to Emma A. Pierson. In her deed conveyance to Dorsey E. West in 1948, the following tracts of land were named, of which this farm was a part; "Dorsey Land", "The Discovery", "Luck Support", "Geists Plains" and "Dorsey's Search Enlarged."

In 1951, 32 acres of the farm were acquired by Neil and Beverly Besse. Ten years later, Hammond and Ella Mae Bosse acquired "Bessie Hall", holding it one year and then conveying it to its present owner, Mrs. Edith P. Popenoe Ryerson.
