DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located within the area designated as a National Historic Landmark in Chestertown, the Denton House is on the southeast side of Water Street between Maple Avenue and High Street.

The house, under restoration, will be more easily understood described as it will appear.

The existing five-bay long street facade is unique in Chestertown. It stands three full stories above a high basement, separated by a painted, molded stone water table. The Flemish bond brickwork has a very narrow, convex, white mortar joint. Each window of the basement, first floor, and second floor is accentuated by a rusticated, painted stone, flat-arch with keystone. On the first and second stories, the window lintel keystones are double, and the central window keystone of the second story is molded and carved. Between the first and second stories is a plain belt course of stone, painted white.

Wood steps will ascend one flight to the central entrance, similar to the stoop design of the James Brice House, Annapolis. Both the entrance door and reveals are paneled with molded raised panels and are flanked by plain Doric pilasters which will support a full pediment. The outline of the original pediment was revealed when the nineteenth-century porch was removed, thereby enabling an exact replica to be constructed.

Brick pilasters at the corners of the facade rise three full stories from the water table up to the cornice and are a feature of the facade. A less developed prototype is found at the headquarters building of the Kent County Historical Society on Church Alley, Chestertown. A rosette carved in a square panel is recessed in a stone block, between the capital of each pilaster and the main cornice. The cornice is a simplification of a Corinthian design with the modillions and plancers (the soffit of a cornice) carved above the capitals only; the carved plancers repeat the design of the rosettes below.

On the river facade, the basement is at ground level, creating a full story. The Flemish bond brickwork is similar to that used on the street (west) facade. A nineteenth-century photograph shows the design of a two-story porch which will be reconstructed. Brick piers will support the wood porch, supported by square columns from the first to the second floor and round columns from the second floor to the roof, a modified continuation of the main roof. A simple balustrade will extend between columns at both levels.

Doors to the interior from each porch level will be located in the central bays. The ground level porch has a wide, diamond chevron, batten door with original long iron strap hinges.

The gable-ends were originally without openings except for a door at the basement level on the southeast; and two casement windows flanking the chimney in each end of the attic.

Mt. Pleasant, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, has a first-floor plan with a central passage flanked by a single large room on the north and a smaller room and stairhall at the south ends. Each room is treated simply, having paneled, recessed interior shutters, a chair-rail, dentil cornice and plaster walls. One original mantel repeats the dentil mold of the cornice. An elliptical arch separates the stair from the passage of the first and of the second stories, although the staircase extends to the attic.

More elaborate rooms are located on the second story. Paneling from the "Chestertown Room" now installed in the Winterthur Museum, was originally in the northeast room. The precedent for its intricate design has been compared with designs in William Pain's The Practical Builder (1744) in a report "The Chestertown Room at Winterthur" by John Snyder, Jr., a Winterthur Fellow. The two remaining rooms retain paneled fireplace walls and dado, reflecting the transition between the earlier Georgian and the Federal designs.

One original raised-panel wall remains on the third story in the southwest room; and a mantel with Chinese fretwork remains in the northeast room. Three small rooms with beaded board partitions were originally located in the three bays of the northeast (entrance) facade.

The latter arrangement was also found off the kitchen in the basement. When restored, the basement will contain kitchen, dining and utility areas. The upper stories will be used as reception rooms and sleeping quarters.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The affluence and influence of the combination college town on a navigable river is exemplified by the architecture of the Denton House, a waterfront residential property.

The first professor of law (1791) at Washington College (founded 1752) was a former resident in the house and recently Miss Frances Denton, the former executive secretary to Colonel Edward House (1858-1938), advisor to President Woodrow Wilson.

The house is known in Chestertown for its local architectural excellence. A room from the house was recognized by Mr. Henry Francis DuPont as worthy of being moved to Winterthur.

The Denton House stands on parts of "water lots" number 12 and 13 of the original plat of Chestertown. John Tennant and Jude Clarkson were the first known grantees of the two lots. In 1736 and 1737, William Timbull, a Barbados merchant, purchased the two waterfront lots from Tennant and Clarkson. At the time of his death, William Timbull had built a house on the lots, as recorded in the legal transactions after his death in the Barbados in 1741. By petition to the General Assembly of Maryland, legal title was granted in 1784 to Eleazer McComb. Upon his legal acquisition of the property, he immediately sold it to Thomas Smyth.

Thomas Smyth (1729-1819) was one of the wealthiest merchants of Chestertown and Kent County prior to and just after the Revolution. He was Judge of the Court for Kent County (1757-1769), a member of the Maryland Conventions of 1774 through 1776, signer of the Association of Freemen in 1775, and member of the Council of Safety for the Eastern Shore in 1775-76. During the Revolution, he was actively involved in securing supplies for the continental army. Thomas Smyth owned the property for two and a half years and then sold it to his son, Richard Gresham Smyth, who held it for only nine months before he deeded it to Peregrine Letherbury.

The purchase price for the property was unchanged from 1784, when Thomas Smyth bought the property, to the time it was sold to Richard Smyth. However, in 1787, Letherbury paid £ 1200 current money, an increase of £ 900 over the original cost of £ 300. Considering the value of the pound after the Revolution and the family relationship between Thomas and Richard Smyth, it is possible that the present structure was constructed during the Smyths' ownership. If not, it was constructed by Peregrine Letherbury, after his purchase on July 19, 1787.

Peregrine Letherbury practiced law in Chestertown, and was the first professor of law (1782-1801) at Washington College. He, as well as Thomas and Richard Smyth, contributed to the founding of Washington College in 1782. Letherbury served as Secretary, and later President, of the Board of Visitors and Governors of the College. In 1776, and again in 1779, he had been elected to the General Assembly of Maryland. After the Revolution he was actively involved in Masonry and in 1791 was elected Grand Master of the Maryland Masonry for one year.

After his death in 1801, the house was left to his daughter Mary, who later married Doctor George Washington Thomas, a physician in Chestertown. Mrs. Thomas had no children and upon her death in 1849 she devised the property to Peregrine Letherbury Wickes and provided for his education. After graduation from Princeton in 1856, he studied law with Severn Teakle Wallis, a very prominent barrister of Baltimore. He settled in Chestertown and later moved to York, Pennsylvania, his wife's home. He then sold the house to his brother, Ezekiel Chambers Wickes, also a lawyer.

In 1877, the house was purchased by Mary Elizabeth Willson Brown, granddaughter of Thomas Smyth. During her ownership, the building was used as a school for girls. From then until 1938, the property passed to various local families, until Miss Frances Denton, former private secretary to Colonel Edward House (1858-1938), advisor to President Woodrow Wilson, purchased the property. Upon her death in 1948, she bequeathed the property to her niece, Miss Marion Weeks. Prior to Miss Weeks' death in 1968, she deeded it to the Maryland Historical Trust to secure its future preservation. Upon the Completion of its restoration, it will be rented as a private home, to be opened to the public five times annually.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located within the area designated as a National Historic Landmark in Chestertown, River House is on the southeast side of Water Street between Maple Avenue and High Street on a part of Town Lot 12.

The existing five-bay long street facade is unique in Chestertown. It stands three full stories above a high basement; separated by a painted, molded stone water table. The Flemish bond brickwork has a very narrow, convex, white mortar joint. Each window of the basement, first floor, and second floor is accentuated by a rusticated, painted stone, flat-arch with keystone. The nineteenth century photograph shows the design of a two-story porch which was reconstructed. Brick piers support the wood porch, supported by square columns from the first to the second floor and round columns from the second floor to the roof, a modified continuation of the main roof. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The purchase price for the property was unchanged from 1784, when Thomas Smyth bought the property, to the time it was sold to Richard Smyth. However, in 1787, River House is a fine example of those dwellings built by prosperous merchants of the eighteenth century. Erected prior to Chestertown's decline as a port in favor of Baltimore, it exemplifies the transition of the late Georgian to Federal style in American architecture.

The house is known in Maryland for its architectural excellence. Paneling from the room was removed to Henry Francis du Pont's Winterthur Museum where it was incorporated into the Chestertown Room.

The first professor of law (1791) at Washington College (founded 1752) was a former resident in the house as was Miss Frances Denton, the former executive secretary to Colonel Edward House (1858-1938), advisor to President Woodrow Wilson.

The Denton House stands on parts of "water lots" number 12 and 13 of the original plot of Chestertown. John Tennant and Jude Clarkson were the first grantees of the two lots. In 1736 and 1737, William Timbrill, a Barbados merchant, purchased the two waterfront lots from Tennant and Clarkson. At the time of his death, William Timbrill, a Barbados merchant, purchased the lots and had built a house on the lots, as recorded in the legal transactions after his death in the Barbados in 1741. By petition to the General Assembly of Maryland, legal title was granted in 1784 to Eleazer McComb. Upon his legal acquisition of the property, he immediately sold it to Thomas Smyth.

Thomas Smyth (1729-1819) was one of the wealthiest merchants of Chestertown and Kent County during the Revolutionary period. He was judge of the Court of Kent County (1757-1769), a member of the Maryland Conventions of 1774 through 1776, signer of the Association of Freeman in 1775, and member of the Council of Safety for the Eastern Shore in 1775-76. During the Revolution he was actively involved in securing supplies for the continental army. Thomas Smyth owned the property for two and one half years and then sold it to his son, Richard Gresham Smyth, who held it for only nine months before he deeded it to Peregrine Leatherbury.

The purchase price for the property was unchanged from 1784, when Thomas Smyth bought the property, to the time it was sold to Richard Smyth. However, in 1787, Leatherbury paid £1200 current money, an increase of £911 £900 over the original £300. Considering the value of the pound after the Revolution and the family relationship between Thomas and Richard Smyth, it is possible that the present structure was constructed during the Smyth's ownership. If not, it was constructed by Peregrine Leatherbury, after his purchase on July 19, 1787.

Practical Builder (1744) in a report "The Chestertown Room at Winterthur" by John Snyder, Jr., Winterthur Fellow. The two remaining rooms retain paneled fireplace walls and dado, reflecting the transition between the earlier Georgian and the Federal designs.

One original raised panel wall remains on the third story in the southwest room; and a mantel with Chinese fretwork remains in the northeast room. Three small rooms with beaded board partitions were originally located in the three bays of the northwest (entrance) facade.

The latter arrangement was also found off the kitchen in the basement which contains kitchen, dining and utility areas. The upper stories are used as reception rooms and sleeping quarters.

Peregrine Letherbury practiced law in Chestertown, and was the first professor of law (1782-1801) at Washington College. He, as well as Thomas and Richard Smyth, contributed to the founding of Washington College in 1782. Letherbury served as Secretary, and later President, of the Board of Visitors and Governors of the College. In 1776, and again in 1779, he had been elected to the General Assembly of Maryland. After the Revolution he was actively involved in Masonry and in 1791 was elected Grand Master of the Maryland Masonry for one year.

After his death in 1801, the house was left to his daughter, Mary, who later married Dr. George Washington Thomas, a physician in Chestertown. Mrs. Thomas had no children and upon her death in 1849, she devised the property to Peregrine Letherbury Wickes and provided for his education. After graduation from Princeton in 1856, he studied law with Severn Teackle Wallis, a very prominent barrister of Baltimore. He settled in Chestertown and later moved to York, Pennsylvania, his wife's home. He then sold the house to his brother, Michael Chambers Wickes, also a lawyer.

In 1877, the house was purchased by Mary Elizabeth Willson Brown, granddaughter of Thomas Smyth. During her ownership, the building was used as a school for girls. From then until 1938, the property passed to various local families, until Miss Frances Denton, former private secretary to Colonel Edward House (1859-1938) advisor to President Woodrow Wilson, purchased the property. Upon her death in 1948, she bequeathed the property to her niece, Miss Marion Weeks. Prior to Miss Week's death in 1968, she deeded it to the Maryland Historical Trust to secure its future preservation. Mr. and Mrs. Karl Miller now occupy the home in return for a contribution toward its restoration. River House is periodically opened to the public.

Installed here is paneling from the Brown house, built about 1762 in Chestertown, Maryland, a thriving port on the Chester River. From the windows of the house was a splendid view of the river and the many ships which sailed between Chestertown and England, the West Indies, and the northern colonies.
