DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Stockton Startt Homestead is a frame structure with a three bay wide, 2½ story main house and a 2-story ell; both sections have gable roofs. The main house measures 33'4" wide and 18'4" deep; it has a three-bay, one story front porch and a two-story bay window on the east gable. The main house roof is pierced by three gable dormers in the south slope and two brick chimneys which are located on either sides of the central stair hall. The dormers have horizontally boarded cheeks, round-headed upper sash, and overhanging eaves. The front porch has round columns and a flat, hipped roof.

The building has 4½" weatherboarding and 4" cornerboards. In the gables and on the second floor of the wing, the exterior siding is cove butt shingles. The structure is painted white with black, louvered shutters.

Windows have two over two sash with round upper sash in the gables and dormers. The central window in the front facade has a pair of one over one sash.

On the east side of the ell is a one-story porch which is divided by a lattice panel into two sections; one has the kitchen door and one the door to the dining room. This porch division appears on many Victorian houses and reflects parallel social division between servant and served. The back stair to the kitchen chamber above--this room not connected to the family bedrooms--similiarly reflects social divisions in 18th and 19th century Tidewater Maryland. The Stockton Startt House had both features although now the stair and chamber arrangement has been changed.

The interior of the house has a nice stair with turned balusters and newels and some original trim. Both features are typical of those in many other contemporary buildings. Mantles and most other interior detailing has been removed or covered.

Behind the house is a series of wooden sheds with gable roofs and vertical siding. There is a turn-of-the-century wooden, gable-roofed barn in the barnyard north of the

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Stockton Startt House is significant because it is one of the common types of Victorian farmhouse and because it is unaltered on the exterior. Although several of these buildings remain in the county, this building has suffered little alteration on the exterior and can serve as a guide to the original appearance of other similiar structures.

Stockton Startt was a long time owner of this property and a nearby road is named for him. This building was constructed for Stockton Startt and his wife by her parents as a wedding present.
