DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Nehouse farmhouse is a 2½ story, three-bay, side-gabled frame structure with a raised-seam metal roof; it is covered in pebble-dash stucco. Windows are three/one, double-hung sash and the foundation is stucco-covered stone.

The main facade (south) has a full-width, shed-roof porch supported by tapered square columns; the porch rests on brick piers. Entrance is through a central door with a transom. Window and door surrounds are plain. A gable with two small windows and a return cornice is centered in the second story; the apex of the gable features a heart-shaped pendant. Interior corbelled brick chimneys are located at the gable ends, on both the main block and the rear wing, and there are small, off-center, four-pane windows in each of the gables.

A large, 2½ story, gable-roof wing extends to the rear from the northwest corner of the main block. A two-story, shed-roof addition (clapboarded on the first story and stuccoed on the second) fills in the ell at the northeast corner of the house; it is attached to the gabled wing. There is a rear entrance at the northeast corner and an entrance into the kitchen on the west facade, toward the rear; the entranceway on the west facade is protected by a small gable-roof portico supported by square posts.

William C. Bowman, the current owner's grandfather, enlarged the original log structure on the site in the late 1890s by adding what is now the main block of the house; the addition consisted of two rooms downstairs and two up. Entrance is to the living room with steps at the rear of the room leading to the second floor. In about 1927, Elwood Nehouse's father, Harry N. Nehouse, demolished the original log section and added the existing kitchen wing at the rear of the house; the structure has not been altered since. The oldest part of the farmhouse, therefore, is the main east-west block, which dates from the 1890s.

There are several outbuildings, the earliest being a small shed (next to the garage) with a gable roof covered in raised-seam metal and vertical plank siding; an old bank barn (now demolished) formerly stood nearby. A 1953 aerial photograph of the farm shows a large, early twentieth century gable-roof bank barn with the characteristic painted windows.

Other outbuildings (dating from the 1940s and 1950s) include a gambrel-roof, clapboard-and-concrete-block dairy barn with an attached gable-roof equipment building; an adjacent silo; a shed-roof, concrete-block machine storage shed; a gable-roof, concrete-block-and-clapboard "loafing" barn; and a gable-roof, concrete-block garage. There are, in all, seven outbuildings.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Nehouse Farm (also called "Valley View Farm") is historically significant because it is an early twentieth century farm complex which is representative of the period when the county was predominantly agricultural. In addition, it has been associated for over a century with the Nehouse family, early settlers in the Clarksburg area. Architecturally, the farmhouse is significant because it is a late-Victorian rural vernacular structure which has retained its original nineteenth century configuration. It is also a familiar visual feature in the neighborhood and a type of early dwelling which is rapidly disappearing from the area.

The Nehouse farm is located on part of the tract known as "Cow Pasture" which Hezekiah Barber sold to William C. Bowman in 1884, "a lot on the northeast side of the road from Cedar Grove to Clarksburg" containing 58 acres.<sup>(1)</sup> According to Mr. Elwood Nehouse, Mr. Bowman's grandson and the current owner and occupant of the house, a log house stood on the property when his grandfather acquired it. Bowman bequeathed the property to his wife, Sallie A. Bowman, in his Will, written in 1908; he died in 1914.<sup>(2)</sup> The 1898 Hopkins Atlas lists W.C. Bowman as a property owner in the area.<sup>(3)</sup>

After Sallie Bowman's death in 1924, to settle a dispute among her heirs the property was ordered sold under a decree of the Circuit Court. In September 1924 it was sold at auction to Sallie Bowman's son-in-law, Harry N. Nehouse for $5490, "all the real estate of which the late William C. Bowman died seized", for a total of 68½ acres.<sup>(4)</sup>

An advertisement in the Sentinel for September 23, 1924 announcing the auction described the property as

"the farm of the late William C. Bowman, situated on the road leading from the pike to Clarksburg, ¼ mile northwest of the village of Cedar Grove.....containing 68<sup>1</sup>/<sub>5</sub> acres..... improved by an eight room frame dwelling house, a bank barn (40x60), meat house, chicken houses and other smaller buildings....."(5)

The main block of the existing farmhouse was part of the dwelling house described in the advertisement. Of the outbuildings mentioned, only one dating from that period remains, the small shed covered with vertical plank siding and a metal roof which stands near the garage.

In 1950, the 68 acre property was conveyed to Elwood Harry Nehouse, Harry N. Nehouse's son and current owner. (6)

Lifelong dairymen, Elwood Nehouse and his father "shipped milk" from their farm to area dairies for almost half a century, in the years when the dairy industry was of primary importance in Montgomery County. (7)

The dairy barn on the property illustrates the changing nature of the dairy industry in Montgomery County in the 1920s and 1930s, as more stringent health regulations forced county farmers to replace the all-purpose bank barn with more modern facilities:

"A major transition in barn design occurred during the 1920s...a result of several factors: the rise of dairy farming as a major industry, the stricter regulations imposed on dairy barns, the introduction of a new type of roof structure, the increased use of concrete block...By 1922, sanitation standards had become more important and ...many farmers were constructing...the new, sanitary barn...Devoted solely to the milking of cows, (it had) concrete milking floors with haylofts above, (was) all on one level, (and was built) of molded concrete blocks, rusticated (in some cases), rock-faced in others...Attention was paid to aesthetics by providing blocks of contrasting color for window and door surrounds and quoins at corners...(Concrete blocks) were readily available by the 1930s and required a minimum of skill to use. Thus, throughout the 1930s and for decades afterwards, concrete blocks were used for cattle barns."(8)

The dairy barn replaced an earlier bank barn, with the typical early twentieth century gable roof, vertical plank covering, stone foundation, and painted-on windows.

The property has belonged to the Nehouse family for over a century, and, although dairying is not as important as it once was, it continues to be an operating farm and a reminder of the period when the county was predominantly agricultural.
