9. Description: This two story three bay by two bay cement block house sits high on a hill overlooking Ten Mile Creek and Valley, and faces north. The cement block is parged with cement, and sits on foundations of brick, cement block, and fieldstone. It was built on the site of another building, and uses some of the original fieldstone foundation. Some of the old foundation stones were used to make the interior fireplace and mantel in the living room. The hipped roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Windows are six-over-one double-hung. The north entrance is covered with vines and is no longer used. The eaves are boxed. There are two brick exterior chimneys, both on the south elevation. There is one-story, one bay by three bay attachment to the west side with a shed roof, asphalt shingles and a fieldstone foundation. There are eight outbuildings. Two predate this house: the Perry Dimes Log Cabin and one barn. This barn is two-and-a-half stories with weathered, vertical chestnut siding and seamed metal gable roof.

10. Significance: This house is significant for its relationship with black history. Georgia Lawson and her husband, Wilfred, built it on the foundation of a 14-room, turreted house which they bought in 1937 and lost due to fire in the 1940s. Lawson was one of the first blacks to purchase a large farm in Montgomery County, and his widow was possibly the owner of the largest county tract owned by a black woman.

Wilfred Lawson had been a professor at Tennessee State College, where he taught agriculture; a dormitory there is named for him. Wanting to practice agriculture instead of teaching it, he and his wife Georgia moved to Boyds. They bought this 162 acre farm from Herbert R. Price in 1937.

When fire destroyed their home, they chose a Better Homes and Gardens design for their new house. It was built with tile walls, concrete block partitions, concrete over steel I-beams between floors, and a metal roof. The fireplace was built with stones from the foundation of the original house. The window frames and central staircase are the only wooden structures in the house. In 1943 Mr. Lawson died as the result of an accident on his farm, and the house was never completed.

Mrs. Lawson rented out her land after her husband's death, but continues to live in the house. She has been extremely active in civic affairs.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This two story three bay by two bay cement block house sits high on a hill overlooking Tenmile Creek and Valley, and faces north. The cement block is parged with cement, and sits on foundations of brick, cement block, and fieldstone. It was built on the site of another building, and uses some of the original fieldstone foundation. Some of the old foundation stones were used to make the interior fireplace and mantel in the living room.

The hipped roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Windows are six-over-one double-hung. The north entrance is covered with vines and is no longer used. It is flanked by two three-light casement windows.

The eaves are boxed. There are two brick exterior chimneys, both on the south elevation. There is one-story, one bay by three bay attachment to the west side with a shed roof, asphalt shingles and a fieldstone foundation.

The entrance is on the west side, and opens into the kitchen. A shed-roofed porch protects this doorway. The bulkhead to the cellar is also on this elevation.

The stone foundation of an old log cabin remains and is clearly visible behind the house, on the south.

There are seven outbuildings, excluding the Perry Dimes Log Cabin (described elsewhere) which is this farm's tenant house. Three of these farm buildings are large barns. The one which predates the house is two-and-a-half stories with weathered vertical chestnut siding and a seamed metal gable roof. A second barn is frame with a seamed metal gable roof, fieldstone and brick foundation, with a shed-roofed, vertical siding attached wing. Another was built by the owner in the late 1930s, as a dairy barn. It has a gambrel roof with seamed metal covering cement, the first level is of cement block, the second level has vertical wood siding, and two silos. There is also an old outhouse, halfway between the house and barn.

The interior has cement floors; the cement walls are mostly faced with mirrors. Painted steel I-beams cross the ceilings between floors. A dark wooden dog-leg stairs has balusters of various design which the owner obtained as giveaways.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This house is significant for its relationship with black history. Georgia Lawson and her husband, Wilfred, built it on the foundation of a 14-room, turreted house which they bought in 1937 and lost due to fire in the 1940s. Lawson was one of the first blacks to purchase a large farm in Montgomery County, and his widow was possibly the owner of the largest county tract owned by a black woman.

Wilfred Lawson was a professor at Tennessee State College; a dormitory there is named for him. He was a captain in World War I. His father was a prominent physician in Washington, and a member of the first class to graduate from Howard University. (Information on the Lawson family has been compiled by the Frederick Douglass Museum in Anacostia, Wash., D.C.) Professor Lawson taught agriculture, but wanted to practice the profession more than teach it, and moved to Boyds. They bought this 162 acre farm from Herbert R. Price.¹

When fire destroyed their home, they chose a Better Homes and Gardens design for their new house. It was built with tile walls, concrete block partitions, concrete over steel I-beams between floors, and a metal roof. The fireplace was built with stones from the foundation of the original house. The window frames and central staircase are the only wooden structures in the house. In 1943 Mr. Lawson died as the result of an accident on his farm, and the house was never completed.

Mrs. Georgia Lawson is of mixed ancestry, including French, American Indian and Haitian strains.² She was educated at the Chicago Art Institute. She met and married Wilfred Lawson when he was an officer in World War I. There is one son, James.

Mrs. Lawson rented out her land after her husband's death, but continued to live in the house. She became very active in civic affairs, and raised a granddaughter, Marcia, and an adopted great granddaughter, Theresa Wheeler. She was a teacher at Poolesville, Boyds, & Germantown elementary schools. She was a member of the County Human Relation Committee, for six years, two of which she served as chairman; she was also on the County's Youth Commission for four years, the Community Action Committee, Health and Welfare Board, Mental Health Board, volunteered at the County Thrift Shop for seven years, served as president of the Boyds Federal Credit Union, and numerous other activities, including the YWCA. She was senior hostess at the U.S.O. for many years.

Mrs. Lawson owns an unusual collection of family memoirs, including letters written by blacks during the Civil War, and the manumission papers of Miss Lucy Price of Southern Maryland. In 1844 Miss Price, an ancestor of Wilfred Lawson, bought her own freedom, and was issued her papers

At the present time Mary Kay Hershberger rents the Lawson farm for her jersey dairy cattle. She lives in a house trailer on the property. Theresa Wheeler, now 16, assists Ms. Hershberger, and has won national recognition for her fitting and showing of the cattle. She has received a $1,000 bond from the County YWCA in honor of her grandmother's efforts there.

The Lawson house is now in the way of the proposed lake at Boyds. Negotiations are presently underway by M-NCPPC to purchase this farm.

FOOTNOTES:

1. Land Records of Montgomery County, Md., 557/376
2. Mrs. Georgia Lawson, interviews on numerous occasions, 1978-1980.

Mrs. Lawson is a descendant of Taylor Bruington of Port au Prince, Haiti, and Dennis and Susan Osby of Atlanta, Georgia. Bruington brought his family to this country in 1860, saw that slavery was practiced, and returned to Haiti for a few years until after the Civil War. His daughter, Minnie Venicia Bruington, married James Ballard "Bal" Osby, and Georgia was their first child.

Her paternal grandmother, Susan Morris Osby, was born to a slave mother in a wealthy family named Morris, of Atlanta, Georgia. The owner sold Susan's mother shortly after the child's birth, and raised Susan in "the mansion". She was very pretty and fair skinned, and was given everything she wanted, according to her account to her granddaughter. At age 15 she met Dennis Osby and obtained permission to marry him and leave the plantation, as she wanted to "go north".

Osby was born in the penal colony of Madagascar of a French father and an American Indian mother. Because of his mother's heritage, Dennis was able to get a free education in the state of Massachusetts, and took advantage of this opportunity, then came to Georgia. He and Susan married, and left her southern home. Twins were born to the couple in a log cabin in Kentucky. They continued north, bought land in Shipman, Illinois, and raised ten children. Dennis was a blacksmith and a shoemaker as well as a farmer. He and Susan wanted all the children to go to college, but this was not financially possible. However, all ten of them did graduate from high school, and the older ones went to work, and helped the younger ones so that they did graduate from college.

After the Civil War, "Bal" Osby advertised for his mother's mother, describing her by a distinguishing mark on her side, perhaps a wart. She came to them for what must have been a very emotional homecoming. Osby built a home on his farm for his mother and grandmother; his father had died. The grandmother died soon thereafter. Years later Susan Osby died of "blood poisoning"; she had a corn on a toe, and cut it out herself with a knife, developing "blood poisoning" shortly thereafter.

Georgia was the first grandchild, and named for this grandmother's Georgia birthplace.

This large two story house, built of stuccoed cement blocks, is the replacement of an impressive three story frame dwelling with a turret that was used as a meeting house for Chatauqua lectures. The new house was designed according to plans from Better Homes and Gardens selected by the owners and followed by a local carpenter. The owner, Georgia Lawson, is a descendant of free blacks from Charles County, Maryland and Illinois, who trace their ancestry to Virginia, Haiti, and Madagascar. The house contains a remarkable collection of objects and curios in the art deco style.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This large two story concrete house stands on a hill overlooking farmlands and pasture in the bottomlands along Ten Mile Creek (east). Around the house are a number of outbuildings, and the dwelling house itself is surrounded by trees, shrubs, and climbing vines. The house is four bays in length and three in depth with a small, flat roofed kitchen on the back length. The house has a hipped roof. The windows contain double hung sashes with six-over-six panes. A brick chimney ascends the back length near the southern corner.

In addition to the kitchen, the downstairs contains a dining room and living room on either side of the large foyer/hallway, in which stairs ascend to the rooms above. On the rear side of the foyer is a smaller study with a fascinating assortment of objects and photographs hung on walls. Among them are a leopard skin, family photographs, art curios, a mounted buck's head. Photographs are also of Mrs. Lawson and her sister with Washington politicians, such as John Kennedy, and visiting notables, such as Emperor Haile Selassie. The living room has an excellent collection of furniture in the art deco style, all of which are original to the house.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

According to Georgia Lawson, this house was built in the late 1930s. She and her husband, Wilfrid Whitehead Lawson, purchased the farm c. 1937 with a large house already on it. Just as they were moving in, the house burned, with the loss of "8,000 books that we had in boxes", Mrs. Lawson remembers. They then built their new house of concrete so that never again would they suffer such a loss by fire. A few year later, he husband died, and Mrs. Lawson has lived here ever since with her children, grand-children, and/or great grandchildren. For many years, she taught school in the Montgomery County school system.

As part of this survey, some of the photographs of the Georgia Lawson family were copied. One is of her father, James Ballard Osby, born in Greenville, Tennessee, c. 1875. Mrs. Lawson says that his ancestors came from Madagascar to Tennessee, and later moved to McCoupon County, Illinois. Mrs. Lawson's mother, Minnie Venecie Brewington was born near Litchfield, Illinois, c. 1877. Her father was Taylor Brewington, and her mother was named "Rose" and was Jewish. Brewington was born c. 1845-50 in Haiti, she remembers.

Mrs. Lawson's husband's family was from Charles County, Maryland near Nanjemoy. His mother was from Virginia and named Rosetta Coakley and is shown as a young girl with a lace collar in the photograph. The elderly lad in one photograph is her husband's father's mother, Susan Morris, from Georgia. These photographs give us important glimpses into the character of the Lawson family, and show the presence and influence of America as a "melting pot" for this family, and by implication for many other Montgomery County families.

Mrs. Lawson's great granddaughter, Teresa Wheeler, lives with her and skillfully raises calves that she shows in fairs and 4-H contests. One of the photographs shows Teresa holding a trophy and blue ribbon that she has won for her efforts.

he Lawson Home, 20610 Tenmile Creek Road

Georgia Lawson's home is an unusual fireproof structure on the site of an earlier, fourteen-room house which was destroyed by fire in the 1940s. Mrs. Lawson's husband, Wilfred, was a professor at Tennessee State College, and an officer in World War I. He taught agriculture, and wanted to practice the profession more than to teach. He and Georgia bought the house and 162 acres in 1937 from Herbert R. Price.³ He built barns, and developed a dairy business.

When fire destroyed their home, Wilfred and Georgia searched for plans for a fireproof house. They chose a Better Homes & Gardens design. The house was built with tile walls, concrete block partitions and a metal roof. The fireplace was built with stones from the original foundation. The window frames and central staircase are the only examples of wood in the house.

In 1943 Lawson died as the result of an accident on his farm. The house has never been completed.

Mrs. Lawson is wellknown throughout the county. She worked as a volunteer at the USO in Washington for several years, and adopted a young soldier as her son. She has taught in county schools and at the Boyds Day Care Center. She has served on various committees in the county. Mrs. Lawson owns an unusual collection of family memoirs, including letters written by blacks during the Civil War, and the manumission papers of Miss Lucy Price of Southern Maryland. In 1844 Miss Price, an ancestor of Wilfred Lawson, bought her own freedom, and was issued her papers complete with thumbprint and detailed description of color shade and marks on her hand.⁴

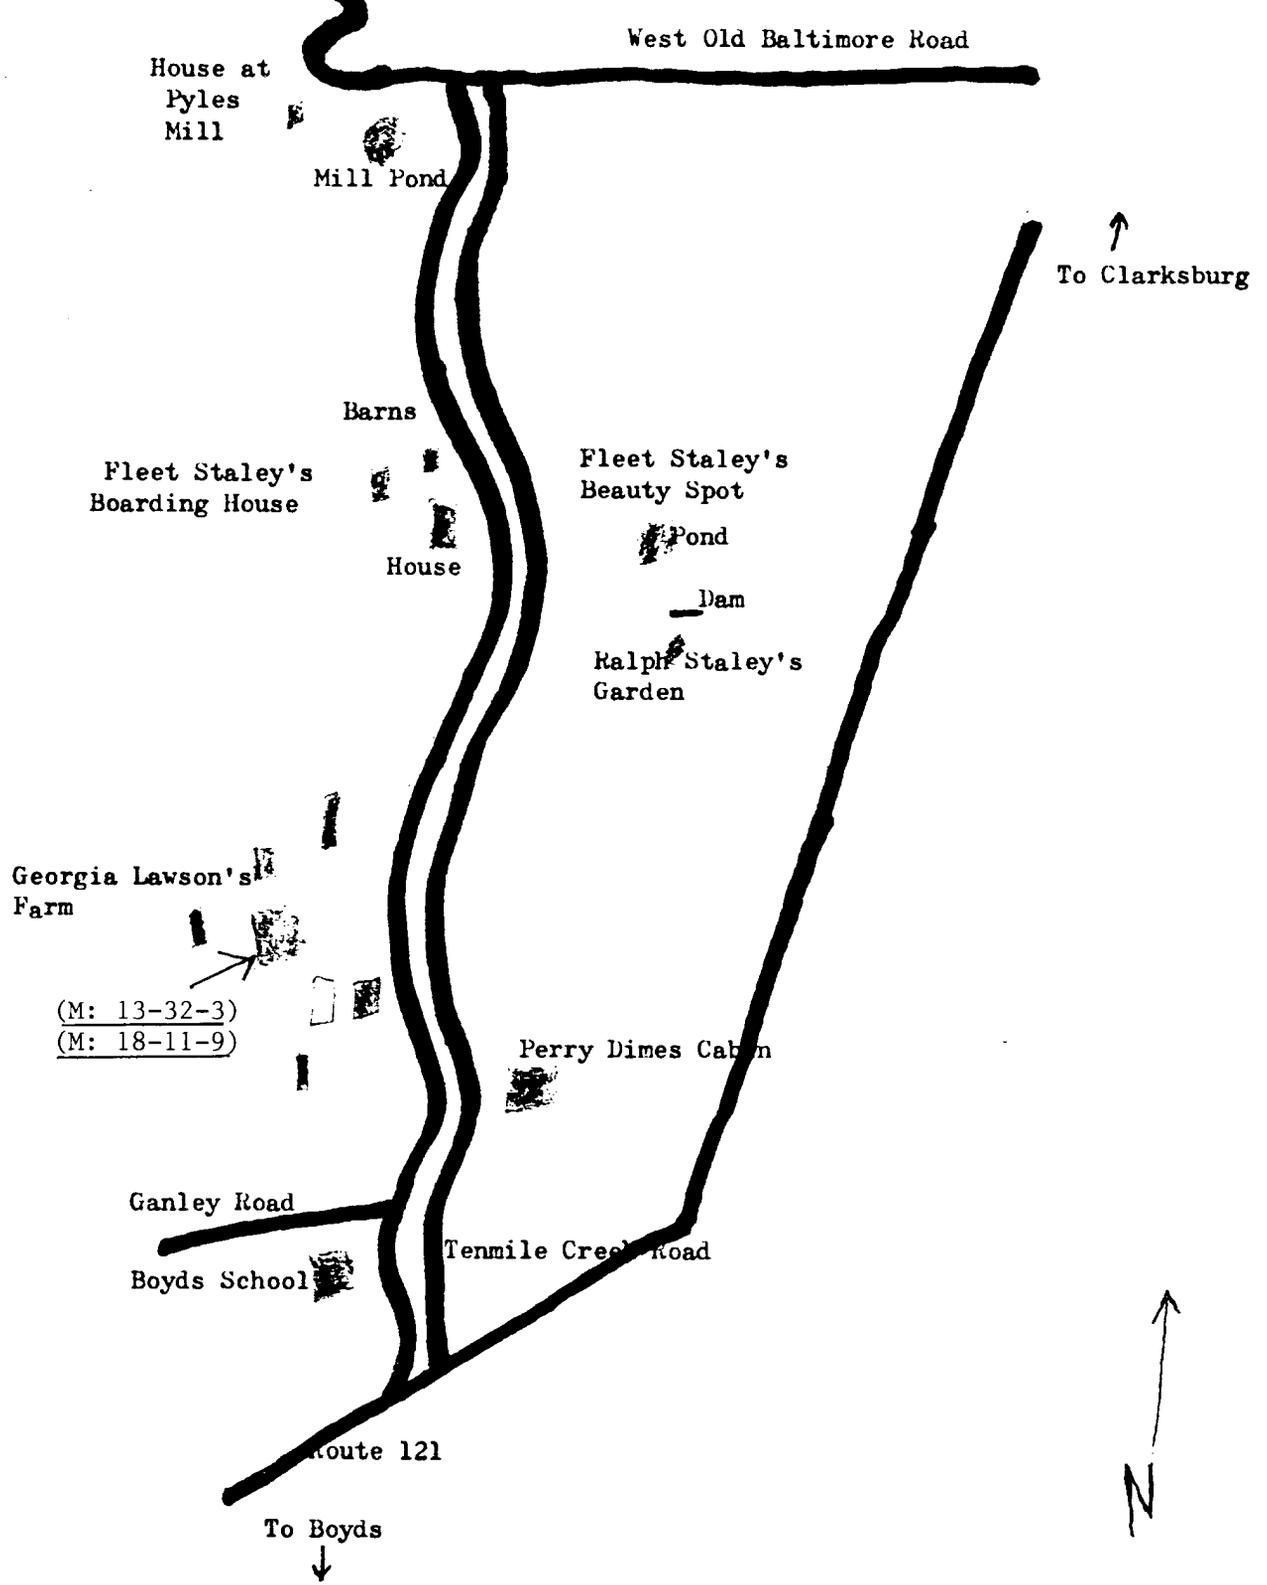

The Lawson farm is still used for a dairy business. Mary Kay Hershberger, 20610 Tenmile Creek Road, rents the property, lives in a house trailer, and milks the guernseys. Mrs. Lawson's great-granddaughter, Teresa Wheeler, helps Miss Hershberger. Teresa was raised from infancy by Mrs. Lawson, but inherited her great-grandfather's love of farming. She has helped Miss Hershberger for several years, and been rewarded by the registration of some of the guernsey calves in her own name. This past August, Miss Teresa won the Supreme Championship at the Montgomery County Fair, an honor signifying the best animal of all the breed

Pyles Mill, 15000 W. Old Baltimore Road

Pyles Mill operated as a mill from the 1820s to the turn of the century. An old house, the mill race and pond are now owned by Mr. and Mrs. David Ortman.⁵ Both Mr. and Mrs. Ortman are attorneys who live in the District of Columbia, and commute on weekends to Pyles Mill. They are in the process of restoring their home to the original condition. Besides the old house and pond, numerous horticultural specimens grace the property, planted by the previous owner, Philip and Marguerite Pratt.

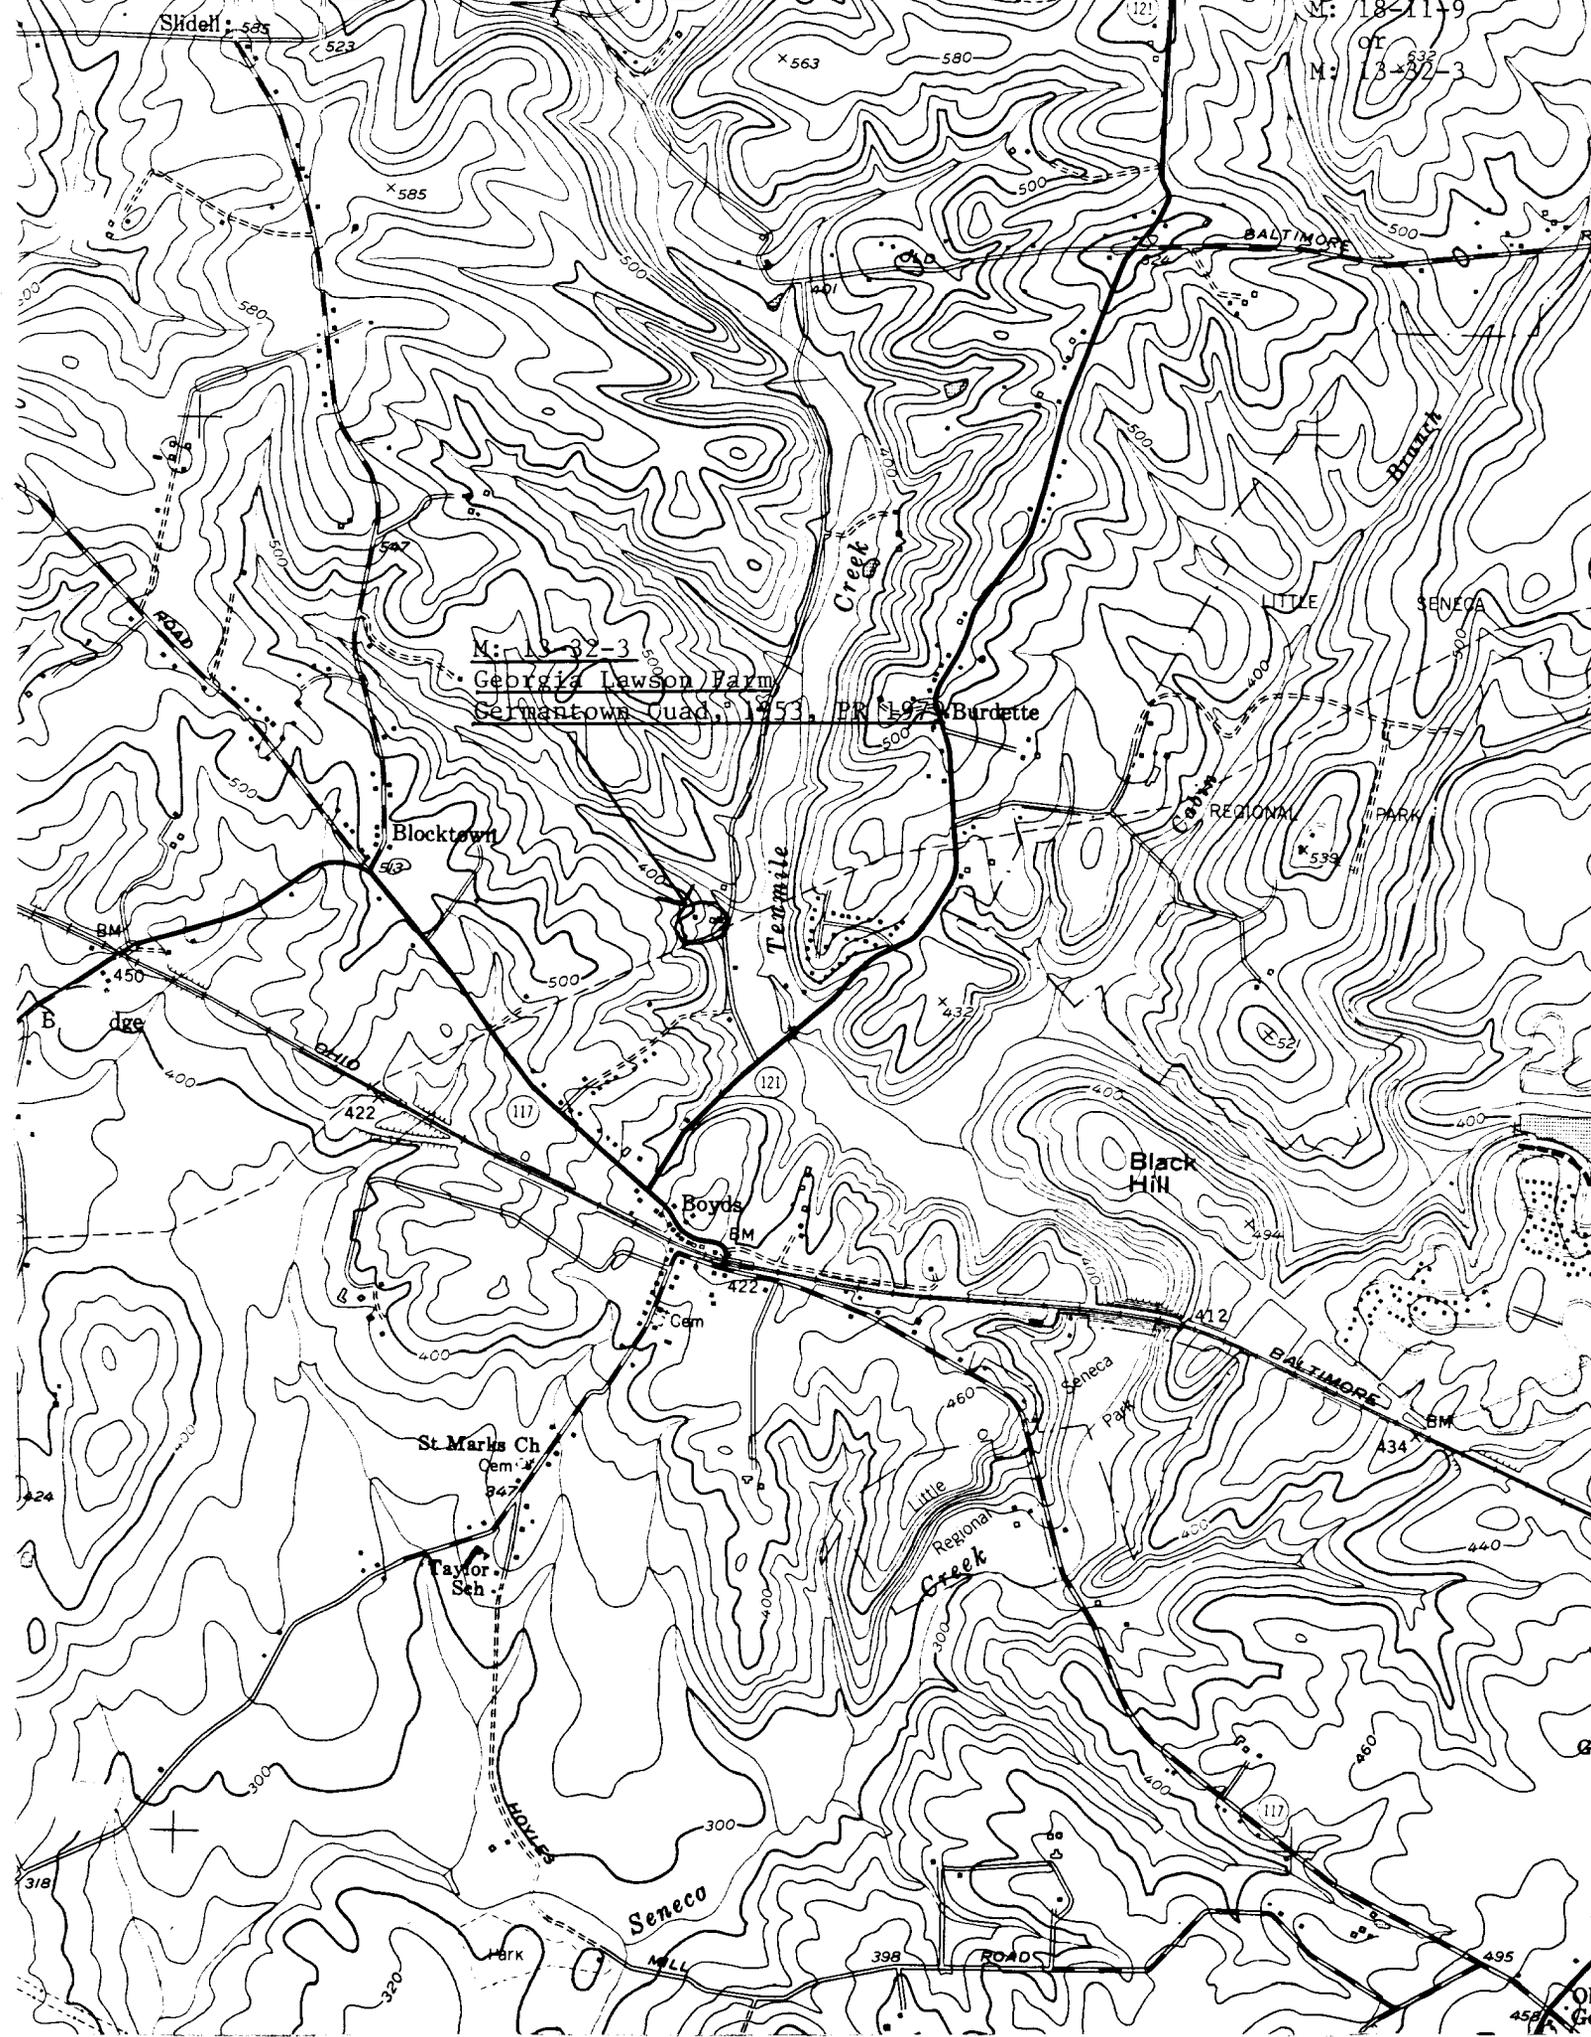

Ortman's twenty acres were once a part of a 100-acre tract spreading on either side of Old Baltimore Road, and owned by George Peter. A road bordered the eastern property line, and led to Clarksburg. This particular road is mentioned in old land records, but only traces can be found today. The road is not drawn on the 1865 Martenet and Bond Map.

Baltimore Road, commissioned in 1793, divides the tract.⁶ The road curves around the ruins of a log house, which is believed to be the original miller's home, indicating the existence of a building at the time the road was plotted.
