

James Brown House
M:23-76
Montgomery County, Maryland

The property known as the James H. Brown House is located at the end of a long drive on the south side of Greenbridge Road, east of its intersection with New Hampshire Avenue in northeastern Montgomery County. The property occupies a 20-acre parcel of land overlooking Brighton Dam and includes a 19th-century log and frame farmhouse and its attendant buildings.

The main dwelling was originally constructed circa 1858 by James Brown as a 1-1/2-story log structure. This structure was later added onto, becoming the rear wing of a side-passage frame dwelling. It was further altered by the addition of a wrap-around, enclosed porch that compromises its original massing. The property includes several historic outbuildings, including a log smokehouse from the 19th century. Although the property retains several of its historic outbuildings, the primary residence has been significantly altered and no longer retains the integrity necessary to meet the criteria of the Maryland Inventory of Historic Properties and the National Register of Historic Places.

The property known as the James H. Brown House is located at the end of a long drive on the south side of Greenbridge Road, east of its intersection with New Hampshire Avenue in northeastern Montgomery County. The property occupies a 20-acre parcel¹ of land overlooking Brighton Dam and consists of a complex dwelling whose oldest section dates to circa 1858, and a cohesive grouping of several domestic and agricultural buildings, including a mid-19th-century log smokehouse. Although the dwelling has been significantly altered over the years, the property, with its attendant buildings, provides a good example of a 19th-century domestic complex.

ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION

The primary residence is a complex frame structure consisting of several parts. The oldest section, built circa 1858², is a 1-1/2-story, gable-roofed log structure, now serving as a rear wing to the larger frame house. The main block of the house, probably built during the late 19th century, includes a two-story, two-bay frame central section covered with a gable roof. Two, two-story frame wings with gable roofs were added to either side of the main block. The entire house, built into a hillside, has undergone extensive alterations.

Exterior Description:

The main block:

Built in the late 19th century, the main block of the house faces north and is built into a sloping hillside and divided into three parts: the central section and the east and west wings. Set upon a raised stone foundation, the central section of the main block is a two-story, two-bay, side-passage frame dwelling. It is covered with a gable roof, sheathed with standing seam metal, and has walls clad with vinyl siding and new window openings. The first story consists of a side-passage entry and a set of three replacement windows, while the second story has two, single 6/6 replacement windows. The side entry, protected by a shed-roof porch, has a wood paneled door with a six-light transom and sidelights. A brick end chimney on the east end of the central section is now enclosed between the central section and the east wing.

² The date of construction is based upon the land purchase date and is consistent with the architecture. The dwelling is clearly indicated on the 1865 Martenet and Bond map.

The east wing of the house, set slightly below the central section on the decline of the hillside, is a single-bay, two-story frame structure covered with a gable roof, clad with standing seam metal. It is set upon a raised stone foundation and has all new replacement windows with 6/1 "snap-in" muntins. The windows are grouped in pairs on the first story and singly in the second story and in the basement level. The wing abuts the east end wall of the central section and is recessed only inches from the facade of it. The roof of the east wing is slightly lower than that of the central block.

The west wing is similarly a two-bay frame structure, clad with vinyl siding and covered with a gable roof, clad with standing seam metal. It is set above the central section on the hill and projects slightly in front of it. This wing includes single 6/6 windows.

Log Section:

The original section of the house is a 1-1/2-story log structure, now incorporated as the rear wing of the main block. Built circa 1858, this small structure faced east, overlooking the Patuxent River. When the two-story, central section of the main block of the house was constructed perpendicular to it, this original log structure became the rear kitchen wing. Although its original form and massing is discernible, it has been significantly altered and added onto, most notably by a 20th-century, wrap-around, enclosed porch.

The 1-1/2-story log section is set upon a stone foundation and covered with a steeply pitched gable roof. A massive stone and brick end chimney is centered on the south end wall, while a contemporary sunroom addition with large plateglass windows wraps around the east and south walls. A shed-roof wing addition projects off of the west elevation of the log structure. Two 6/6 gable dormers, cut into the boxed cornice, are located off-center of the east and west slopes of the gable roof.³ The massive stone and brick end chimney has been heavily parged at the base and shoulder level. The brick shaft, laid in an all-stretcher bond,

DOMESTIC OUTBUILDINGS:

A row of several outbuildings aligns the south side of the entry drive leading to the James Brown House.

Garage: south of the house on the other side of the driveway is a long, two-story hollow tile and frame garage with attached equipment/storage sheds. 20th century date of construction.

Smokehouse: Next to the garage is a 19th-century log smokehouse. It is covered with a gable roof and has board and batten side walls over the log structure. The south elevation of the structure is not clad, however, revealing the square log notching and stone chinking. A single door is located on center of the north wall of the smokehouse.

Outbuilding: An unidentified frame structure is located next to the smokehouse. It is similarly covered with a gable roof and has board and batten walls. The north wall has a single door opening on center and single, six-light fixed windows on the east and south walls.

Hay Barn: A frame haybarn with a hay hood is located southwest of the house, towards the head of the entry drive leading back to the dwelling.

Several other buildings, including a stable, and two other barns occupy the site.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The James H. Brown farmhouse was originally constructed circa 1858 by James Brown as a 1-1/2-story log structure. This structure was later added onto, becoming the rear wing of a side-passage frame dwelling. It was further altered by the addition of a wrap-around, enclosed porch that compromises its original massing. The property includes several historic outbuildings, including a log smokehouse from the 19th century. Although the property retains several of its historic outbuildings, the primary residence has been significantly altered and no longer retains the integrity necessary to meet the criteria of the Maryland Inventory of Historic Properties and the National Register of Historic Places.

Historic Context:

Now a rear wing to the main block of the house, the log section of the James Brown House is believed to have been built by James H. Brown about 1858.¹ At the time of its construction, the James Brown House sat on 131.5 acres of land tracts referred to as "Millseat," "Hisuett's Choice," "Johnson's Choice" and "Brooke's Addition." The farmland was allotted to James Brown by the division of the real estate of his deceased father, also named James Brown, in 1855.² A two-story frame building was later added to the original log structure.

In 1891, James died, leaving a wife, Minerva, and three children: Milton, William and Sarah. The farm went to his son, William.³ When William died in 1929, the farm became the property of his widow, Olive Brown, and their children, Nolan and Nellie.⁴ In July of 1935, Olive conveyed the farm to Samantha Brown Nichols who immediately conveyed it to Walter and Beatrice Wilson.⁵ In 1979 Walter and Beatrice Wilson sold the property to John F. Wilson and his wife, Leona P. Wilson. In the 1990s, the property was subdivided such that a small parcel of the larger, historic

The James H. Brown farmhouse is significant as an example of vernacular architecture typical of that constructed in Montgomery County from the mid-nineteenth through the early twentieth centuries. The early one and a half story log section of the house is believed to have been built by James H. Brown about 1858.¹ The house then sat on 131.5 acres of land tracts referred to as "Mill-seat," "Hisuett's Choice," "Johnson's Choice" and "Brooke's Addition." The farmland was allotted to James by the division of the real estate of his deceased father, also named James Brown, in 1855.² A two story frame building was later added to the original log structure.

In 1891, James died intestate leaving a wife, Minerva, and three children; Milton, William and Sarah. The farm went to his son, William.³ When William died intestate in 1929, the farm became the property of his widow, Olive Brown, and their children, Nolan and Nellie.⁴ In July of 1935, Olive conveyed the farm to Samantha Brown Nichols who immediately conveyed it to Walter and Beatrice Wilson.⁵ The farm has been in the Wilson Family ever since. It is presently resided in by Mr. and Mrs. John Wilson.⁶

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
The house is a 2 story building with an older 1-1/2 story log section. On the south end is a large stone fireplace with a brick stack. The facade has two bays and had a porch across the first floor of the facade. There are newer wings on either end. The interior had an entrance hall with staircase at the back, rising toward the front. There is a room to the east of the hall with a closed-in fireplace. Behind this is the new kitchen with the stone chimney. There is a smokehouse, a cellar and the foundation for a well-house (now with a greenhouse sitting on it) on the site. The house has been extensively altered by the outbuildings are still in a reasonably preserved state.
