Addendum

The Hunter Davison Farm is located off of Old River Road within Seneca Creek State Park, in Montgomery County. The farmhouse is wood frame construction, two stories tall, and set upon a fieldstone foundation. It has a "T"-shaped design, with a side porch on the northwest corner, and is covered with clapboard painted white. Since the last survey of the house was undertaken in 1979, the structure has not changed much on the exterior. The one noticeable addition are corner brackets on the wood, front porch, post supports. Other structures include a wood frame barn with a tin roof, and also a two story, wood frame garage with asphalt shingles. This property is a rental by the Department of Natural Resources and is in excellent condition.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Hunter Davison House, located to the north of Old River Road, is a two-story, gable-roofed, frame farmhouse dating from between 1900-10. The principal rectangular block of the house is intersected by a rectangular two-story wing of lesser height resulting in a T-shaped plan which is one room deep at all points. This plan is modified by the addition of a shed-roofed, one-story porch at the northeast corner. The entire building is sheathed in wooden clapboarding, painted white.

The south facade, where the main entrance is located, is characterized by a three-bay system: on the first story, a central doorway is flanked by two equal-sized windows; in corresponding positions on the second story are three similar shuttered windows, all containing sash which have been subsequently replaced by two-over-one divisions. A one-story, open porch on four plain, rectangular post supports with a slightly sloping shed roof extends the full length of the facade. A pressed tin ceiling with a pattern of small squares exists in good condition over the wooden, plank-floored porch. The central entrance is emphasized by the presence of a gable-roofed wall dormer projecting from the standing seam tin roof but unbroken by any window opening.

A chimney projects from the intersection of the two wings of the house and another newer one is located on the gable end of the "L" (north elevation). The shed-roofed addition on the east side of the building contains another entrance leading directly into the kitchen. More recent triple-sashed windows have been installed on the west face of the building on the first floor of the "L".

The interior of the house, also in excellent condition, is elaborated by detailing of door and window surrounds characteristic of other houses in the Seneca area.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Hunter Davison farmstead is significant to the Seneca area because it typifies a once-abundant type of early twentieth century house and farm complex, which is becoming increasingly rare in the wake of suburban sprawl.

The parcel of land on which the farmhouse sits can be traced, in more or less its present configuration, to 1896.

The farm was located just off of Old River Road and so would have been an integral part of the community called Riley's Lock, which centered around Poole's General Store and the Benuti Allnut house, both of which were also built in the first ten years of this century.

Features such as the well-preserved, pressed tin ceiling of the front porch and the interior window and door trim which it shares with other area houses (Gassaway, Charles Allnut) distinguish this unprepossessing dwelling.
