Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Samuel Jones House is an early nineteenth century farmhouse which, although extensively enlarged, has retained its original character. The property is now accessed by Red Barn Lane, off Glen Mill Road to the east, which ends in a cul de sac southwest of the property. While the south facade was apparently the historic front, the north side is now used as the front entrance. The house is sited on a hill overlooking a pond, a swimming pool, and open fields and woods. The open, rural setting is important to the character of the house.

The Samuel Jones House, begun in c1803, contains a main, side gabled block facing south, a rear ell with gable end facing north, and a gablefront wing connected to the east by an enclosed hyphen. The gabled roofs, covered with wood shingles, have box cornices with gable returns. Most windows are either six over six or two over two double hung sash.

The main block is a two and one half story, five bay, I house. Entrance to the front (south) facade of the main block is from the center bay, through a partially glazed, paneled door. Windows at the second level are six over six, double hung sash and, at the first level, elongated two over two sash reaching almost to the ground. Windows and door have wide wood surrounds with projecting cornices on the first level. External chimneys stand on both east and west gable ends (the former now partially enclosed by a one story hyphen). A stone patio accessed from the central door indicates current use of this area as a back yard.

The three bay, north side of the main block contains six over six sash on the second level and standard size two over two sash on the first level.

On the west gable end of the main block, two small louvered windows flank the chimney upon which is fixed sign reading "The Knob."

This main block, constructed of logs, was probably built in two sections, judging by the slightly asymmetrical fenestration (the distance between openings in the central bay and those to the east is greater than the distance between other bay openings). The first section appears to have been a three bay, two story structure with the entrance in the easternmost bay. Another room on each story was added to the east--not long after initial construction since it is also built of logs--to create the five bay form.

Later in the 19th century, the main block was enlarged by a two-and-one-half story, three-bay rear ell, near the northwest end of the main block. This was probably built by Samuel Jones in the post Civil War era. At this time, the long two over two sash windows on the first level of the south facade were probably installed. An external chimney is located at the north gable end. The upper gable end and chimney top are obscured by ivy. A small diamond-shaped window is centered at the second level of the rear ell's west elevation.

On the east end of the main block is a one story, two bay, side gable hyphen with sliding glass doors on the south elevation. Attached to its east end is the east wing which has a roof ridge perpendicular to the hyphen and main block. The wing is built into the side of the hill so that the southwest corner is one and a half story and remaining elevations, which have the lower level exposed, are two and half stories tall. Most windows are two over two double hung sash. The lower level is covered with brick siding. An internal chimney is centered on the wing. The east facade of the wing is six bays wide.

Both gable ends of the wing contain cornice returns. The south gable contains a small diamond window with 90° angles. French doors are located on both levels. The upper doors, framed by pilasters and a dentiled cornice, open onto a wooden deck which forms a roof above lower doors which open onto a concrete pad.

The present main entrance is located on the north facade of the hyphen sheltered by a simple porch extending from the east facade of the rear ell to the west facade of the wing. The stone floor of the porch extends beyond the dripline of the shed roof. The recessed paneled door is flanked by sidelights.

The interior is described as follows:

"The south door opens into a central hall. An open string, double-run stairway ascends along the east interior wall. It has a square newel post, cherry handrail, and square balusters. East of the hall is the dining room. It has an exposed-log west interior wall. East of the dining room is a large modern living room with exposed rafters. West of the hall is a room called the Log Room (formerly the living room) because all its log walls are exposed. North of the dining room is the kitchen. The house has random width Georgia pine flooring. There are plaster over lath walls and ceilings on the main house (where the log walls are not exposed) and plasterboard walls and ceilings in the east wing. There are molded doorways and paneled doors."<sup>1</sup>

To the west of the house is a four-bay, ell-shaped garage with clapboard siding and raised-seam metal roof which was constructed c1984. Two overhead doors each are located on both east facades. A bank barn which was located west of the house is marked by a partial stone wall.<sup>2</sup>

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Summary: Though expanded in the 20th century with side and rear additions, the Samuel Jones House, built about 1803, contains an early example of a five bay, log I house.

The Samuel Jones House (c1803) is representative of an upper middle class dwelling. Probably built for John Bowie, who comes from a wealthy family whose members were longtime residents in the area, the Federal style house is quite similar in form and detail to Montanverde (#24/24; c1806-1812), built for the influential Peters family. Though the house was expanded with a rear ell and side wing, and windows were replaced in the late 19th century, it retains much of its Federal style character.

The brick mansion, Pleasant Hills (#24/21), built c1763, exhibits a similar asymmetry with the central bay slightly off center. The slightly asymmetrical fenestration may indicate staged construction of the main block, or it may be the byproduct of local building traditions.

The earliest part of this house was probably constructed by Dr. John Bowie soon after he inherited the land upon the death of his father, Allen Bowie, Jr. The property was part of a 1000-acre tract known as Wickham and Pottinger's Discovery, patented in 1721.<sup>3</sup> Landowner of more than 1,000 acres, Allen Bowie, Jr. was a prominent citizen, having attended the 1774 Maryland Convention in Annapolis as a delegate, and served as county commissioner from 1799-1800 and 1802.

John Bowie, a physician, owned the property only four years. He resided at the family homestead, Hermitage I, in the Wheaton vicinity, before his death in 1825.<sup>4</sup>

In the half decade after Bowie sold the farm it was owned first by Robert Waters, then Zachariah Gatton (see chain of title). When the Gatton heirs were selling the farm, in 1846, they divided it into four lots. Like most farms in the area, by mid century, land on the property had become depleted from poor farming practices. Appraisers of the farm stated, "the land immediately around the buildings is at this time in a pretty fair state of cultivation having been limed within the last few years...the (remainder) of arable land is nearly exhausted by cultivation and is now becoming covered over with young saplings..."<sup>5</sup>

Samuel Jones, a Montgomery County native in his mid-20s, bought Lot #1 which contained the farm house described as "a frame two story house...at this time in a pretty good state of preservation."<sup>6</sup> By 1894, Jones owned 346 acres in this vicinity, a sizeable farm for the area. It is not known where the farm buildings were located. Period maps indicate a structure in addition to the present house, perhaps a tenant house, was located directly adjacent to the present Glen Mill Road.<sup>7</sup>

When the Lanklers bought the house in 1957, it was in dilapidated condition and stood on a four acre lot. The house was restored by Lois Taylor, architect, and her builder husband, Edwin L. Taylor. The Lanklers called the house, "The Knob," after a historic sign the family discovered in Hagerstown.<sup>8</sup>

9. Description: This eight bay by two bay, two-and-a-half story house sits on a hillside facing south. The original house was two stories and five bays. A north ell was added sometime later. About five years ago an east ell was constructed. The house has grey novelty siding. There are two-over-two double-hung windows. On the south elevation, first level, these windows almost extend down to the ground. At the second level, south, there are six-over-six double-hung windows. The house has intersecting gable roofs with wooden shingles.

10. Significance: Dr. John Bowie received land from his father Allen Bowie in 1803, and it is believed that soon afterward he constructed the first section of this farmhouse. In 1806 he sold his farm to Robert Waters, who in turn sold it to Zachariah Gatton.

Like most of their contemporaries, the Gattons cultivated their land without use of fertilizer, resulting in the gradual reduction of soil quality and productivity. When the Gatton heirs put the property up for sale in 1846, it was described by appraisers as arable land nearly exhausted by cultivation and covered with young pine saplings.

In 1855 Samuel Jones bought the farmhouse and, with the help of new fertilization methods, gradually reclaimed the farmland around it. Although the farm gradually increased in size, during the 20th century the house deteriorated. The present owners purchased it and a small lot in 1957, and have brought it back into habitable condition.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This eight bay by two bay, two-and-a-half story house sits on a hillside facing south.

The original structure was a two story, five bay log house built about 1803. This was enlarged by a one-and-a-half story two bay north ell. Recently a modern frame wing was built to the east of the main house. The house has grey novelty siding. On the south elevation there is a fieldstone patio. The south door to the main house is wooden paneled. The east wing has sliding glass doors on the south elevation. On the east elevation of the north ell there is a glass and wooden paneled door.

There are two-over-two double-hung windows. At the first level, south elevation, these windows extend almost to the ground. At the second level, south elevation, there are six-over-six double-hung windows.

The house has a gable roof with wooden shingles. There are north, east and west exterior gable end chimneys. The east chimney has a sign which reads: "The Knob". There is an exterior chimney on the north elevation of the east wing.

The south door opens into a central hall. An open string, double run stairway ascends along the east interior wall. It has a square newel post, cherry handrail and square balusters. East of the hall is the dining room. It has an exposed log west interior wall. East of the dining room is a large modern living room with exposed rafters. West of the hall is a room called the Log Room (formerly the living room) because all its log walls are exposed. North of the dining room is the kitchen.

The house has random width Georgia pine flooring. There are plaster over lath walls and ceilings on the main house (where the log walls are not exposed) and plasterboard walls and ceilings in the east wing. There are molded doorways and paneled doors.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Samuel Jones House ("The Knob") is an early 19th century farm house.

In the second decade of the 18th century Nathan Wickham and Samuel Pottinger were granted 1,000 acres of land along Watts Branch in southwestern Montgomery County, which they called "Wickham's and Pottinger's Discovery". Allen Bowie bought 200 acres of this land. Bowie was a large land owner, a descendant of one of the earliest county settlers, and involved in the movement for independence. In 1774 he was elected to attend the first Maryland Convention in Annapolis, and after the formation of Montgomery County in 1776, became involved in county politics. From 1799-1800 and again in 1802 Bowie was a county commissioner. At his death in 1803 he left much of his land to his son, Dr. John Bowie. It is believed that soon after acquiring the land Dr. Bowie built the first section of the house.

In 1806 Dr. Bowie sold his farm at "Wickham's and Pottinger's Discovery" to Robert Waters. Waters sold the property in 1816 to Zachariah Gatton, who owned other land in the area. In 1821 Gatton gave some of his land, including the farmhouse, to his children for their own use. Like most of their contemporaries, the Gattons cultivated their land without use of fertilizer, resulting in the gradual reduction of soil quality and productivity. When the Gatton heirs' property was put up for sale in 1846, the court-appointed appraisers described the farm in this way: "the land immediately around the buildings is at this time in a pretty fair state of cultivation having been limed within the last few years...the (remainder) of arable land is nearly exhausted by cultivation and is now becoming covered over with young pine saplings...."

It was decided that the farm should be farmed and four lots were auctioned off. Samuel Jones bought lot #1 which contained the farm house, a building described as "a frame two story house...at this time in a pretty good state of preservation."

With the introduction of new fertilization methods, the land was gradually reclaimed for farming. The farm gradually increased in size until it was not used and gradually deteriorated. The present owners purchased it and a small lot in 1957. At that time the old farm house was in danger of collapsing and had to be brought back into habitable condition. A new section was added to complete the present structure.

According to the present owners, the sign with "The Knob" printed upon it which currently hangs on the chimney outside was found in the attic at the time of purchase. Its origin and significance is unknown.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The original section of the house is a two-story, L-plan building. The south end is the original two-story, log structure. It has external end chimneys. In plan, it has a central hall and flanking parlors. The five-bay facade has a central doorway and 2/2 double hung sash windows that extend to the floor. The second floor windows are 6/6 double hung sash. The cornice is boxed and returned in the gable ends. Siding is tongue and groove.

To the north, a two-story frame ell was added. It is similar in scale to the original house. It has 2/2 double hung sash windows, an exterior chimney on the north end, and a boxed cornice.

There is a modern addition to the east. The bankbarn has collapsed but foundation stones are visible.
