DESCRIPTION SUMMARY:

All Saints Church at Monie, a single-story frame building facing southwest, with the gable oriented on a northwest/southeast axis, is five bays across by one room deep. The 1881 frame church is supported by a continuous common bond brick foundation, covered by a steeply pitched asphalt shingle roof. Each side of the rectangular church is sheathed uniformly with weatherboard siding. Two small brick stove stacks pierce the central roofline. The southwest (main) elevation is five bays across with a gabled entrance vestibule. The adjacent four bays of the church are filled with paired Gothic arched windows. The church interior has a vaulted blue ceiling with a series of tie beams spanning the distance between the side walls. Each end is supported by a decorative Victorian brace. The walls are fitted with horizontal board wainscoting. The church furniture consists of blocks of Victorian pews to either side of a center aisle. The pew ends were executed in a simple S-curve with chamfered corners and a club-shaped finial. The altar rail consists of turned balusters and a simple molded handrail. The altar furniture consists of Victorian style chairs. Located northwest of the church is the cemetery with eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth century burial sites and markers.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION:

All Saints Church at Monie stands on the northeast side of Venton Road approximately one-half mile northwest of Deal Island Road (MD 363). Venton Road intersects the Deal Island Road four miles west of Princess Anne, Somerset County, Maryland. The single-story frame church faces southwest with the gable oriented on a northwest/southeast axis.

Five bays across by one room deep, the 1881 frame church is supported by a continuous common bond brick foundation, and it is covered by a steeply pitched asphalt shingle roof. Each side of the rectangular church is sheathed uniformly with plain weatherboard siding. Two small brick stove stacks pierce the central roofline. The southwest (main) elevation is five bays across with a gabled entrance vestibule filling the northernmost bay. The gable front vestibule roof has extended eaves and stick brackets under the lower corners. A double-leaf paneled door opens into the vestibule, and narrow Gothic arched lancet windows pierce each side. The adjacent four bays of the church are filled with paired Gothic arched windows. The southern bay has colored glass while the other three have clear glass.

The northwest gable end is marked by a pair of Gothic arched colored glass windows, and a small gold cross rises from the gable. The northeast side of the church is pierced by three pairs of Gothic arched windows, and the southernmost bay is marked by a shed-roofed sacristy also lighted by Gothic arched sash windows. The southeast side of the sacristy is defined by a four-panel door. The southeast gable end of the church is distinguished by a tripartite altar window of colored glass, and a small gold cross rises from the roof.

The church interior has not been significantly altered since 1881. The vaulted blue ceiling was originally painted with small stars, but when the ceiling was repainted the stars were not included. A series of tie beams span the distance between the side walls, and each end is supported by a decorative Victorian brace. Hanging from the ceiling and attached to the plaster walls are late nineteenth-century lighting fixtures. The walls are fitted with horizontal board wainscoting. The church furniture remains essentially intact with blocks of Victorian pews to either side of a center aisle. The pew ends were executed in a simple S-curve with chamfered corners and a club-shaped finial. The altar rail consists of turned balusters and a simply molded handrail. The altar furniture consists of Victorian style chairs. Entrance into the adjacent sacristy is provided through a four-panel door with a colored glass Gothic arched transom.

SIGNIFICANCE SUMMARY:

All Saints Church at Monie, built in 1881, is significant for its architecture as a remarkably well preserved example of a small, rural Gothic Revival church taken from the designs of Richard Upjohn, a prominent mid-19th century architect. Upjohn published a series of designs in Rural Architecture for rural churches, parsonages, and schools which were copied or adapted widely by many small parishes nationwide. This church is one of nine known examples of this type of religious building still remaining in Maryland. Many more are known to have been built although a complete inventory of those built has never been made. All Saints Church can be compared with Saint Paul's Episcopal Church (1851, National Register) in Hillsboro, Caroline County, and Saint Andrew's Church (1878, National Register) near Sudlersville, Queen Anne's County. Most striking of these Upjohn inspired churches is Saint Michael's Chapel (1854, National Register) in Reisterstown, Baltimore County. All Saints Church is one of the last of this group of nine structures built in the nineteenth century and is the only one to have horizontal siding. The interior of All Saints Church retains most of the original furnishings and decorative detailing. The building possesses a high degree of integrity of historic character.

Section number 8 Page 8.2HISTORIC CONTEXT:

All Saints Church is the surviving representative of the Monie congregation established during the late seventeenth century on Arnold Elzey's plantation, "Almodington." Around 1710 the church site was moved from the edge of the Manokin River to its current location near the head of Little Monie Creek. The Monie church was consecrated by the name "All Saints Church" by the Right Reverend William Rollinson Whittingham, Bishop of Maryland, on November 10, 1845. This frame building was completely demolished on July 31, 1879 by a severe windstorm. Two years later, the Victorian structure was consecrated by the Right Reverend Henry Champlin lay, Bishop of Easton, on May 5, 1881.

Architecturally, All Saints Church at Monie is one of fewer than ten surviving churches in Maryland whose construction, form, proportions, and detailing recall patterns published in Richard Upjohn's Rural Architecture. These buildings characteristically have steep pointed gables, lancet windows, decorated bargeboards, and an air of fragility which results from the thinness of construction members. Most have board and batten siding. All Saints, however, has weatherboard siding. Of the nine examples identified in Maryland, seven are already listed in the National Register. The nine churches, including All Saints, are:
