DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

All Hallows Episcopal Church, 101 North Church Street, Snow Hill, Maryland, was built during the mid-eighteenth century. In 1748, an Act of the Colonial Assembly appropriated money for building the church by means of a levy of tobacco on taxable inhabitants. The rectangular, brick building was completed after an additional levy in 1756 under Reverend John Rosse who was rector from 1754 to 1775. The building has a gable roof with a deep cove cornice. Reinforcing the southwestern corner are two brick buttresses, one to the front (west) and the other on the side. The nave, four bays in length, has very long circular-headed windows with small panes now of white translucent glass surrounded by a band of red. Flanking the entrance are two similar windows. Originally, the church had side entrances and a hexagonal cupola at the western end. The cupola was removed in 1891 when a slate roof was installed. At that time, the bell, a gift of Queen Anne, was hung next to the church. Initially there <sup>was</sup> high, step-up box pews, brick aisles and a gallery for slaves around three sides of the sanctuary. The Bible, published in London in 1701, and the linen and lace Eucharistic Veil were given by Queen Anne. The ornate brass pulpit and lecturn dates from after 1859 and the marble font near the entrance from 1877.

Significant alterations have been made to the original structure. In 1872, the box pews and side galleries were removed and the brick floors covered with wood. The gallery now extends across the rear of the church. A few of the 1872 pews were moved to the rear of the church when they were replaced in the 1960's. There was more extensive work in 1891 when the chancel with its carved marble altar and reredos was built. The pulpit, originally placed in the northeast corner, was moved to the east end. The altar was flanked by large windows similar to the others before the chancel was added and the stained glass window installed over it. At this time, the brick interior walls were plastered and the side entrances were closed and replaced by windows. In addition, a painted, stretched canvas ceiling was placed over earlier tongue-and-groove boards which covered earlier exposed beams that had been damaged by a fire. The clear glass windows were replaced with stained glass in 1899. When the brick retaining wall along the two street sides was built in 1938, the 1862 wrought iron fence was moved outward to enclose the extended church yard. Attached to the rear of the church is the Parish House addition built in 1956.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

All Hallow's Episcopal Church is located on the southeast corner of Church and Market Streets in Snow Hill, Maryland. In 1692 when Snow Hill Parish was organized, it was one of four in Somerset County. The parish extended north from the Maryland-Virginia line and west from the ocean to Stepney, Somerset and Coventry Parishes. By 1696, it had considerable strength with an assembly of 358 taxable persons. Initially a church was built in 1734 near the bank of the Pocomoke River at the foot of what is now Bank Street. When Somerset County was divided in 1742, Snow Hill became the county seat of Worcester County, and the parish became known as All Hallows as early as 1710.

Early church records were destroyed in an 1834 fire that destroyed the courthouse and much of Snow Hill. According to a late nineteenth century local paper, the ground for the church was given to the parish by Mrs. Randall who lived on Federal Street. However, there was an Act of the Colonial Assembly (June, 1748) for a levy on taxable inhabitants of 80,000 lbs. of tobacco for the purpose of building a brick parish church. The building was to be located on land for public use on a hill opposite the town market lot on the west side of Church Street. By 1756, the church was not finished. In order to complete the work, an Act for an additional 45,000 lbs. was levied, that amount to be paid in five equal annual installments of $1.33 per 100 lbs. of tobacco. The building was finished by Reverend John Rosse who was rector from 1754 to 1775.

All Hallows is a good example of eighteenth century, vernacular church architecture. Even though additions and alterations have been made, the building retains its original form and is a significant part of Snow Hill.
