HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #68-35 Building Date: 1891

Building Name: Lown House

Location: 4107 Gallatin Street, Hyattsville

Private/Residence/Occupied/Good/Inaccessible

Description

The W.G. Lown House is a large two-story gable roof frame dwelling of irregular plan, set on a small knoll, fronting on Gallatin Street in the Hyattsville National Register Historic District. The house dates to 1891, and is characterized by its steeply pitched, cross-gabled roof. The five-bay north, main facade has a central projecting bay beneath a cross gable. At attic level is a tripartite window, a central 2/1 sash flanked by two fan-shaped windows. The upper gable is wood-shingled, with a wooden sunburst panel in the triangular gable peak. The rakeboard is wide and has a raised decorative molding with an interlocking chain design. The projecting central bay is flanked by an east and west entrance door. An entrance porch shelters the doors, crossing the projecting bay and wrapping around its east and west sides, forming a "U" shape. The porch has slender turned and chamfered posts, the crown-molded cornice overhangs the decorative frieze, which is cut to form pointed arches above each porch bay. Both entrance doors have two lower vertical rectangular wood panels and a large upper glass light surrounded by small square stained glass sidelights. The house is sided with narrow lapped wood siding with corner boards and roofed with black asphalt shingle. The gable roof slopes to the porch roof and is pierced by a dormer with a pyramidal cap. The interior has a roughly "t" shaped plan, with the west stairhall and east dining room flanking the long central living room. The kitchen is to the rear, in the south kitchen wing.

Significance

The W. G. Lown house is significant as a large, fine example of a Victorian suburban dwelling. It has been the home of several prominent residents of Hyattsville since its construction in 1890. William G. Lown purchased Lots 34 through 37 of Wine and Johnson's First Addition to Hyattsville in 1890 and the house was constructed soon afterwards at a cost of approximately $2,000. Lown was a coffee wholesaler, whose business, called the Greenleaf coffee and spice mills, was located at 7th and C Streets, S.W. in Washington, D.C. Lown sold in 1892 to Richard E. White, Secretary of a Building and Loan Association. He owned the Lown House through 1927 when it was acquired by Smith W. Brookhart, a United States Senator from Iowa. The Brookharts owned the Lown House through 1944 and may have completed the remodeling dating from that period. Despite ca. 1940's alterations the house has much original Victorian detail on the interior and exterior.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The W.G. Lown House is a large two-story gable roof frame dwelling of irregular plan, set on a small knoll, fronting on Gallatin Street in the Hyattsville National Register Historic District. The house dates to 1891, and is characterized by its steeply pitched, cross-gabled roof.

The five-bay north, main facade has a central projecting bay beneath a cross gable. The bay has two 2/1 double-hung wood sash windows at first story level, with board surrounds, a wide board lintel with raised crown molding, and louvered wooden shutters. Centered at second story level is a triple window of 1/1 sash. In the upper gable, at attic level, is a tripartite window, a central 2/1 sash flanked by two fan-shaped windows. The upper gable is wood-shingled, with a wooden sunburst panel in the triangular gable peak. The rakeboard is wide and has a raised decorative molding with an interlocking chain design.

The projecting central bay is flanked by an east and west entrance door. A three-bay one-story entrance porch shelters the entrance doors, crossing the projecting bay and wrapping around its east and west sides, forming a "U" shape. The porch has slender turned and chamfered wood posts supporting the flat porch roof. The crown-molded cornice overhangs the decorative frieze, which is cut to form pointed or Tudor arches above each porch bay. The porch has a low wooden floor set on brick piers interspaced with wood lattice.

Both entrance doors have surrounds similar to the windows. Both have two lower vertical rectangular wood panels and a large upper glass light surrounded by small square stained glass sidelights. Both are surmounted by a transom covered by a paneled board. The facade is asymmetrical, as the east end has a window adjacent to the entry door, and the west end does not.

There are three bays at second story level, a double 2/1 sash window on the east, a triple window in the central projecting bay and on the west, the gable roof slopes to the porch roof and is pierced by a dormer window. The small dormer has a modern, two-light window and is surmounted by a pyramidal cap.

The house is sided with narrow lapped wood siding with corner boards. It is roofed with black asphalt shingle and rests on a brick foundation.

The three-bay west gable end has a central 2/1 sash window situated between first and second story levels, lighting the interior stair landing. There is a 2/1 sash window centered at attic level. The upper gable is shingled, like the cross-gable on the main facade. The northern half of the rakeboard is wide and repeats the decorative molding used on the front gable. The brick foundation is visible on this facade.

The east facade is a narrow, one-bay gable end with double 2/1 sash windows at first and second story levels, and a centered, attic level same sash window. The upper gable is shingled and has the decorative sunburst in the gable peak, and rakeboard used on the north and west gables.

The south, rear facade has a rear entrance to the main stairhall, in the west bay, beneath the long sloping roof overhang. The facade is dominated by a two-bay two-story cross gable with an attached two story gable kitchen wing.

The cross gable is shingled in the south gable peak and has an attic level six-light window. Attached on the southeast portion of the facade is a low two-story, two-by-two bay gable wing which houses the kitchen. The wing is set on a brick foundation and has the same siding and window treatment as the main block. There is a rear entrance in the southwest bay and a bulkhead cellar entrance centered below the south facade. A seam up the south wall between the first and second bays indicates some alterations to the kitchen wing after its initial construction. An unusual feature of the wing is the asymmetrical gable roof slope. The west plane slopes down to first story level, while the east plain is quite short and stops at second story level. The two bay east facade of the wing has 2/1 sash windows at first and second story level.

The interior of the Lown House has a roughly "t" shaped plan, with the west stairhall and east dining room flanking the long central living room. The kitchen is to the rear, in the south kitchen wing.

The west entrance door is into the small stairhall. The stair opens to the right of the entry door, rises two steps to a dogleg turn, rises along the west wall of the hall, and doglegs once again to the second floor. The open-string stair was undergoing renovation and missing some of its balustrade. The turned, tapering balusters are set two to a step. There are chamfered posts surmounted by circular knobs at the stair turns. The turned newel post is set on a chamfered base and has a chamfered upper section and is surmounted by an oval knob. The stair crosses the first story west window. The wide baseboarding with a cap molding continues up the stairway to the second floor.

The door and window surrounds are a wide plan molding with an inner and outer raised edge, and corner blocks. A wide arched opening leads from the stairhall to the central living room. The arch looks like an alteration from what was originally a doorway.

The central living room runs the length of the house from the north to the south. A hearth, altered by a large random fieldstone mantel, is on the east wall of the room. Moldings in this central room have three wide flat bands and bull's-eye corner blocks. A four-panel door with a transom in the west wall of the room leads to a small room beneath the main stairway. This small room is probably the south or back half of the main stairhall, which was closed off and a small kitchen installed when the house served as a rooming house. A south, rear exit from this small room onto the rear porch formerly was the rear entrance to the stairhall, which ran the full length of the house.

The second, east main entrance door enters the east parlor or dining room. This is the most elaborately finished room in the house, or the one with the most original material. A hearth in the west wall shares the chimney with the hearth in the living room. The square hearth opening has a brass insert with a central grate and decorative side panels with an incised floral motif. The wooden mantel has wedge-shaped brackets supporting the mantel shelf and a central cartouche with a raised pyramidal molding in the frieze. There is white-painted wood wainscoting covering the lower half of the walls, composed of square panels of flush, beaded boards laid diagonally, separated by vertical, banded molding. The wide baseboarding has four horizontal bands and an elaborate cap. The chair rail surmounting the wainscoting has a "cut-out" design of three interlocking circles, or a three leaf clover motif, and a banded cap molding.

The door and window surrounds are multi-band with corner blocks having a raised central pyramid rather than a bull's-eye. These pyramidal moldings are similar to those on the mantel. There is a wide wooden ceiling cornice composed of a flat, inward sloping molding with a narrow line of banding at the center, and an upper and lower cyma reversa molding. There is a built-in china cabinet in the south wall of the room, adjacent to the entry to the kitchen. The cabinet has the same surround as the doors in the room, and double doors with a central rectangular glass panel in each. There is a wainscot panel below the cabinet. In the southwest corner is the entry to the central living room. The entry has high swinging double doors of three panels each, which look original to the house but were recently installed by the owners.

The kitchen is a large room with an enclosed stair to the second story in the northeast corner. The capped baseboarding and simple banded molding with bull's-eye corner blocks is identical to that in the main stairhall.

The second story has a small bedroom over the west front door and a bath over the southwest, back portion of the stairhall. There are two central bedrooms over the large central living room on the first story. The bedrooms have corner fireplaces in their southeast and northeast corners, respectively, abutting each other and above the hearths on the first story. These hearths have no flues, however, and are closed off, with baseboarding crossing the lower part, indicating that they were not intended for use. The simple wooden mantels have brackets supporting the rectangular mantel shelf, and a raised pyramidal molding in the frieze. There are two bedrooms on the east side of the second story, over the dining room and over the kitchen, flanking the back stairwell.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The W. G. Lown house is significant as a large, fine example of a Victorian suburban dwelling. It has been the home of several prominent residents of Hyattsville since its construction in 1890.

William G. Lown purchased Lots 34 through 37 of Wine and Johnson's First Addition to Hyattsville in 1890.¹ The large house that stands upon these combined lots was constructed soon afterwards at a cost of approximately $2,000.² Lown was a coffee roaster and coffee and tea wholesaler, whose business, called the Greenleaf coffee and spice mills, was located at 7th and C Streets, S.W. in Washington, D.C.³ Lown held the property for only two years, and sold it in 1892 to Richard E. White.⁴ White's occupation, according to the United States Census for 1910, was as Secretary of a Building and Loan Association. He owned the Lown House through 1927.⁵

The property was acquired in 1927 by Smith W. Brookhart, a United States Senator from Iowa. Brookhart served in the Senate from 1922 through 1933.⁶ He continued to reside in the Washington, D.C. area, practicing law and acting as an international consultant, through his retirement in 1943. The Brookharts owned the Lown House through 1944 and may have completed the remodeling dating from that period, such as plaster archways rather than doorways between some of the rooms, and the large fieldstone mantel around the living room hearth.

Despite ca. 1940's alterations to the living room, the Lown house has much original Victorian detail on the interior and exterior. On the interior, the east parlor is the most ornamental, with the pyramidal moldings on the wooden mantel repeated on the corner blocks of the door surrounds. The room has decorative baseboards, diagonal wooden wainscoting, a built-in cupboard and a wide wooden cornice. On the exterior, wood shingling in the gables, a rakeboard with an applied decorative design, wide wooden lintels over doors and windows, a "U" shaped entrance porch with turned posts and decorative cornice detail, as well as a tiny tower-like dormer all make the house exceptional.

HYATTSVILLE.

The Beautiful Metropolis of Prince George's County.

"RAVENSWOOD."

RESIDENCE OF LOUIS D. WINE.

HYATTSVILLE IS SITUATED on the Washington Branch of the B. & O. Railway, about five miles from Washington and is the largest and most substantial town in Prince George's county.

From the first its progress has been slow, but very steady, until now as the metropolis of Prince George's county, Hyattsville is a beautiful village of nearly sixteen hundred inhabitants. Its surroundings are all of the most delightful character, and as a business or residential location it cannot be surpassed. It is a beautiful village of nearly sixteen hundred inhabitants. Its surroundings are all of the most delightful character, and as a business or residential location it cannot be sur-edifices, a brand new school house with eight grades; the Melrose Institute, a boarding school for young ladies, and three other private schools. The fact that Hyattsville has concluded to monopolize the first page of this issue of THE SUBURBAN CITIZEN shows there is nothing small about its people and it is the purpose of this article to place our readers in possession of reliable information about the place and some of its enterprising business men and interests.

A large and complete stock of coffees, teas, spices, peanuts, etc., is constantly carried so that no delay is experienced in filling orders, and the trade in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia is promptly supplied at terms and prices which defy successful competition. The house numbers among is permanent customers many of the leading grocers of Washington and goods are delivered daily by wagons throughout the city. An excellent picture of this establishment appears elsewhere on this page.

DR. CHAS. A. WELLS, WHOSE picture we present, was born in Prince George's county, studied medicine with an uncle, Dr. A. S. Magruder, graduated from the University of Maryland in the class of '62, and has practiced medicine continuously since.

He has been attending physician to Reform School, D. C., since it was built, more than twenty years. When he first commenced practice there were but five dwelling houses in Hyattsville, but Bladenburg was a flourishing town.

MR. LOUIS D. WINE, WHOSE picture appears here, is the pioneer of successful sub-divisions around Washington. His operations have been chiefly at Hyattsville, Md., where, by very quiet and modest methods he has seen an increase in population from less than three hundred to over fifteen hundred, as reported by the last census. It is owing to his great faith in Hyattsville and its future that this increase was brought about.

He has also seen values increase here from one hundred dollars to over two thousand dollars. His home, "Ravenswood," a cut of which appears elsewhere on this page, is a beautiful place situated upon an eminence in the center of the village and about five minutes walk from the station. It is an ideal home, completely embowered with elegant shade trees and is surrounded by well-kept lawns.

Messrs. Johnson & Wine have, within the corporate limits of Hyattsville, about one hundred acres of land which they are making preparations to subdivide, and will probably place some of it on the market the coming summer. This land is very high and partly in of his profession both by education and training.

He always has the best drugs and chemicals and proprietary preparations of standard quality and merit and makes a fine display of toilet and fancy articles and perfumes, and keeps in stock everything required in the sick room, as well as confectionary, cigars and tobacco, in which he has a large trade.

The prescription department is under his immediate direction and supervision and the people for many miles around are fortunate in having not only and, strange to say, no hotel. Throngs of people crowd it every summer seeking accommodations, and many of its permanent residents are compelled to seek board with private families. A golden opportunity awaits some energetic and capable man who will embrace it. Messrs. Duckett & Ford have but recently been made agents of the Hyatt property, for which they expect to find ready sale.

The people here claim to have the finest suburban depot line. Hyattsville has a flourishing Masonic lodge and also a solid lodge of the Independent Order of Mechanics, with a membership of about forty each. About a year ago Mr. Louis D. Wine donated land at the corner of Spencer street and Ravenswood avenue for a Masonic Temple.

Subscription books were opened and now nearly enough money has been gathered together to build a fine temple which will reflect credit upon its generous hearted founder and most liberal contributor as well as upon the very prosperous village itself.

A great many people have already made up their minds and many others will soon make up their minds that they prefer to live and raise their families in Hyattsville, where they will have access to grocery, dry goods and cotton stores, butcher shops and drug stores, two wood and coal dealers, a very stable and tile dealer and physicians in a business line, four church market for building lots.

ON THIS PAGE IS PRESENTED a cut of the country residence of Mr. W. G. Lown. It is a beautiful place on a knoll overlooking the surrounding country for miles and is provided with nearly every convenience.

Mr. Lown is a wide awake young man and has a large circle of friends. He is the sole owner and proprietor of the Greenleaf coffee and spice mills in Washington, D. C. This business was established in 1849 by Mr. Riley who was succeeded in 1875 by Mr. W. J. Lown, who conducted the business until 1888, when Mr. W. G. Lown became sole owner. The mills include a substantial three story structure and the equipment of machinery and other mechanical appliances embraces the latest and best that can be procured, including four coffee roasters and every modern improvement for preparing spices.

All the goods are absolutely pure, and, with the processes used, the full strength, flavor and excellence of the home near the turnpike and only a few minutes walk from the depot. As a bonded auctioneer he is thoroughly posted and gives every description of sales his personal attention.

His auction rooms are located at 637 L. Ave. opposite the city post office in Washington, where five floors are devoted to the purposes of displaying, selling and storing furniture, etc.

He has regular sales every Thursday and Saturday; makes appraisements, conducts trustees', assignees', administrators' and all other sales of real estate and makes prompt settlements.

Ever since 1850 or for over forty years he has been engaged in the business and well merits the title of "the oldest auctioneer in Washington."

Through honest and promptness seem to be the motto which has grounded him in public esteem and made his name a household word in every home for miles.

engaged; and may be implicitly relied upon. They are prompt and correct in transactions, and sustain a high reputation and enjoy the esteem and confidence of the whole community.

LOWN'S COFFEE MILLS.

MR. ALFRED HYATT WELLS was born in Bladensburg, Md., and is a graduate of Bladensburg Academy, and of the Spencerian Business College and the National College of Pharmacy of Washington, D. C.

He spent several years in Southern Kansas as book-keeper for a wholesale firm, then returned and took up the study of pharmacy with Tschiffely & Evans, druggists, of Washington, D. C., and was prescription clerk until 1889, when he became proprietor of the drug store at this place. He has enlarged his store and greatly improved it with elegant fixtures of oak with oil finish and an elegant soda fountain. It is very neat and handsome in all its appointments and contains a large and carefully assorted stock of everything usually to be found in a first-class establishment of this kind. He is conducting business according to modern ideas and is well qualified for the duties is located in the southern part of Hyattsville. Streets are nicely graded, and fruit and shade trees planted. A number of lots have been sold and built upon, and considerable building is to be done in the spring. Lots are generally 50x150 feet, and range in prices from $150 to $550. They can be bought upon the exceedingly easy terms of $5 per month.

The Hyatt Subdivision, now largely owned by Mr. Wm. H. Perkins, of the old firm of Perkins & Co., Baltimore, is located in the heart of the town, running down to the depot and rising with a gentle swell to the residence of the Schoepfs. Some of the most valuable real estate in Hyattsville is in this tract, which is beautifully located, and destined to find purchasers. Here, too, is the fine old Hyatt mansion, residence of the late C. C. Hyatt, after whom Hyattsville was named. The grounds comprise several acres of handsome shade and ornamental trees. This property would, it seems to us, be a bonanza for some live hotel man. Hyattsville is a town of 1,600 inhabitants, with a situation unsurpassed for health and convenience to the large cities, firms as embracing the leading industries of the city, it becomes necessary to devote a portion of space to the old established and honored firm above mentioned, which, for many years has maintained a pre-eminence in its line of trade in this city.

The business of this firm was founded by A. R. Fowler in 1878. It was afterwards conducted by A. R. Fowler & Son but now by E. A. Fowler. Every convenience is provided for the handling and accommodation of the large stock carried and for the prompt filling of all orders. The stock consists of wood, coal, coke, lumber, cement, lime, posts, sand, plaster, brick, terra-cotta and fire-clay pipes, fertilizers, phosphates, and plaster, etc. Mr. Fowler has recently purchased a good slice of land and will build a large warehouse near the crossing where he can have a side track. He is a native of Washington, a member of several secret and benevolent societies, enjoys a wide acquaintance, and is regarded as an honorable, upright merchant, and an estimable and public-spirited citizen.
