

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #71B-2-1 Building Date: ca. 1870

Building Name: Straining House

Location: 13005 7th Street, Bowie, Maryland

Private/Residence/Unoccupied/Fair/Inaccessible

Description

The Straining House is a front-gabled brick town house with Italianate features, which stands on a lot in the town of Huntington (now known as Bowie). The main block is two stories high and three bays by five. Principal facade is the north gable end, which fronts directly on 7th Street; entrance is in the first bay, through a replacement door. The opening for the door has been decreased in size; a flat arch is still visible in the brickwork seven courses above the modern door opening. The other openings are filled with round-arched windows, 2/2 double hung sash; all have plain wooden sills and no shutters. Fenestration on the long east and west sides of the building has been altered. The gable roof is covered with gray asphalt shingle; it has a plain boxed cornice and overhanging eaves. Interior of the main block consists of stairhall and parlor in the front, with two smaller rooms to the rear. The staircase has a heavy turned newel with mitered cap, and turned balusters. Molding of the door surrounds is multi-band ovolo, and there is a high molded baseboard. Attached to the rear of the building, and covering the door and round-arched window of the two-bay south gable end, is a one-story shed-roof frame addition.

Significance

The Straining House is perhaps the only surviving example in Prince George's County of a front-gabled brick town dwelling in the Italianate style. It was constructed circa 1870 in the newly platted town of Huntington. In 1869 Ben H. Plumb purchased circa 250 acres of farmland through which the main line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad was being constructed. At the point where a spur line to Washington joined with the B&P RR, Plumb surveyed and platted a town of approximately one square mile; in 1870, he offered building lots for sale, each of 2,500 square feet. Several stores were constructed, lots were reserved for school and churches, two parks were laid out, and the railroad company began construction of depot, round house and machine shops. The subject house stands on Lot 15 of Square 16, and is one of the first houses constructed in the town of Huntington. In 1874 it was acquired by John Straining, a German merchant who purchased a large number of lots in the new town, and operated a general store. It remained the Straining family home until it was sold in 1943. The Straining House is probably the last surviving example of its type in Prince George's County. Built in the early days of Huntington City, it exemplifies the front-gabled Italianate style of urban residence, and stands today as one of the earliest surviving dwellings of that railroad era town.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Straining House is a front-gabled town house, which incorporates features of the Italianate style. It consists of a gable-roof main block, built of brick, to which a frame rear extension was later added. It stands on a lot in the town of Huntington (now known as Bowie).

The main block is two stories, built of brick in American bond (seven courses of stretchers to each course of headers); it is circa 21 by 41 feet, three bays by five. Principal facade is the north gable end, which fronts directly on 7th Street, one of the original streets of the town of Huntington. Entrance is in the first bay of this north gable end, through a replacement door. The opening for the door has been decreased in size; a flat arch is still visible in the brickwork seven courses above the modern door opening, at the same level with the window openings. The other openings are filled with round-arched windows, 2/2 double hung sash, typical of the plainer Italianate style. These windows are longer on the first story of the north gable end; all have plain wooden sills and no shutters.

Fenestration on the long east and west sides of the building has been altered. In the southmost bay of each side, a small square modern window has replaced the original round-arched window on the first story. A window in the third bay of the east facade (first story) has been structurally closed. In the second bay of the east elevation is a door, with two-pane fan transom, approached by a flight of four steps and a concrete stoop. A door in the second bay of the west elevation has been structurally closed; its flat arch is still visible in the brickwork.

The gable roof is covered with gray asphalt shingle; it has a plain boxed cornice and overhanging eaves. There is a stove chimney in the east plane of the roof between first and second bays.

Interior of the main block consists of stairhall and parlor in the front, with two smaller rooms to the rear. The staircase rises along the east wall; the rest of the stairhall has been enclosed with modern (mid-twentieth century?) panelling, forming a storage room accessible from the rear. The staircase has a heavy turned newel with mitered cap, and turned balusters. Molding of the door surrounds is multi-band ovolo, and there is a high molded baseboard.

Attached to the rear of the building, and covering the door and round-arched window of the two-bay south gable end, is a one-story shed-roof frame addition. It is two bays deep, and has entrance in the second bay of the east facade. An exterior concrete block stove chimney rises near its northwest corner.

To the rear of the house, at the south end of the lot, is a frame gable-roofed shed, in deteriorating condition.
