

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. # 76A-15 Building Date: ca. 1889

Building Name: Cox-Francis Farmhouse

Location: 5608 Livingston Road, Washington, D.C. 20745

Private/Residence/Occupied/Good/Inaccessible

Description:

The Cox-Francis Farmhouse is a rectangular frame two-story structure with an asphalt shingle gable roof, horizontal siding, a brick foundation, and a simple boxed cornice throughout the structure. It is northwest of Livingston Road, separated from the nearby subdivision by its large lot. The three bay west (entrance) facade has a central cross gable, 6/6 windows on the first and second stories, and a central entrance with a single light transom. The entrance is sheltered by a hip roof, one-story, three-bay porch with a cement slab floor and turned posts. The north and south gable ends have an interior corbelled brick chimney at the roof ridge. Both facades are two bays, composed of 6/6 first and second story windows. The three bay east (rear) facade has three second story windows and a first story shed roof enclosed porch on a cement foundation. The house has an "I" plan, with a central hall flanked by one parlor on each side. A frame smokehouse rests on brick piers south of the house. There is an extraordinary large, old holly tree to the northwest.

Significance:

The Cox-Francis Farmhouse was built ca. 1889 by Charles W. Cox, on a part of the Oxon Hill Manor estate, owned by Thomas E. Berry. The house appears on the 1894 Hopkins map of Washington, D.C. and Vicinity. Charles W. Cox died in 1901, but the house and property remained in the Cox family until 1931 when the Cox estate was finally settled. The property was acquired by James M. Francis in 1940, and has remained in the Francis family until this time. The house is typical of farmhouses built in the county in the late 19th century. The characteristics it shares with farmhouses built in this period include its interior "I" plan, central cross gable on the entrance facade, and austerity in further architectural detail. The only stylistic accents on the exterior are the turned porch posts. The Francis farmhouse, on its large lot of wooded and open areas is one of few evidences of a formerly rural past in an area of subdivisions and commercial development.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Cox-Francis Farmhouse is a two-and-one-half-story frame gable-roofed building, three bays by two bays, with a one-story rear addition. It stands on a hill overlooking a branch of Oxon Run, separated from a nearby subdivision by Birchwood City Park on the west and buffered by its own large lot.

The entrance is in the central bay of the three-bay main west facade, through a door with a single-light transom. Above the door at loft level is a pedimented cross-gable which is not perfectly aligned with the central door. Across the west facade is a one-story hip-roofed porch with concrete floor and turned posts. The house is sided with plain weatherboard painted white. Windows are 6/6 double-hung-sash, and have plain board surrounds and no shutters. The cornice is boxed and returned at the gable ends. There is an interior corbelled brick chimney at the ridge at each of the north and south gable ends. The roof is covered with asphalt shingle, and the building rests on a brick foundation. The interior plan is that of a standard I house: central stairhall flanked with a parlor on each side.

An enclosed porch forms a one-story kitchen addition across the east (rear) facade. This shed-roofed addition is one bay deep, and rests on a concrete foundation.

A short distance northeast of the house is a gable-roofed one by two bays, one-story outbuilding, sided with rough weatherboard and resting on brick piers. Northwest of the house in an open field is a very large old holly tree

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Cox-Francis Farmhouse was built ca. 1889 by Charles W. Cox, on parcels that were a part of the Oxon Hill Manor estate. Cox acquired the property in three separate parcels, from Thomas E. Berry, owner of Oxon Hill Manor at that time. The house appears on the 1894 Hopkins map of Washington, D.C. and Vicinity, on 38 acres of land. Charles W. Cox died in 1901, but the house and property remained in the Cox family until 1931 when the Cox estate was finally settled. The property was acquired by James M. Francis in 1940, and has remained in the Francis family until this time.<sup>1</sup> It is still the 38 acre parcel acquired by Charles W. Cox.

The Francis Farmhouse is typical of vernacular farmhouses built in Prince George's County in the late 19th century. The characteristics it shares with farmhouses built in this period include its interior "I" plan, central pedimented cross gable on the entrance facade, and austerity in further architectural detail. The only stylistic accents on the exterior are the turned porch posts. The Francis farmhouse, on its large lot of wooded and open areas is one of few evidences of a formerly rural past in an area of subdivisions and commercial development.
