

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #76B-9 Building Date: ca. 1830's

Building Name: Sheriff-Mattingly House

Location: 1011 Lindsay Road, Oxon Hill, Maryland

Private/Residence/Occupied/Excellent/Inaccessible

Description:

The Sheriff-Mattingly house is an imposing three-part brick structure, presently surrounded by the small lots of a 1950's subdivision just outside the Capital Beltway near Oxon Hill. The central block is a two-and-one-half-story gable-roofed building (ca. 30 feet square) with principal facade to the north. (Two flanking two-story wings have been attached during this century.) Entrance is in the central (but off-center) bay of the three-bay north facade, through a panelled door with seven-pane transom and three-pane sidelights. The doorway is surmounted by a flat arch, as are the window openings. Across the north facade runs a one-story porch, supported by four Tuscan columns, built early in this century. Ghosts of earlier pilasters are visible on each side of the door. The walls of the house are laid in common bond: one header to five stretchers. Windows on the first story are 9/6, and 6/6 on the second; they are double hung sash, but only the lower sash is movable. The boxed cornice is returned at the gable ends. Two projecting courses of brick corbelling provide a decorative border below the cornice. There is an interior chimney at each of the east and west gable ends, to the rear (south) of the ridge. The east (kitchen and dining) wing was built in 1920, and replaces the original one-story kitchen wing. The west, (sitting-room) wing was built new in 1929. In both wings, bricks were selected to match the color and size of those in the main block, and care was taken to reproduce the corbelled brick cornice.

Significance:

The Sheriff-Mattingly house is one of only a handful of late-Federal brick plantation houses surviving in Prince George's County. Construction details indicate that it was built in the 1830's or 1840's during the ownership of Ann Talbott, who received this farm (Hart Park, part of Oxon Hill Manor) from her uncle. From 1853 until his death in 1897, this house was the home of Alfred Thomas Sheriff, who called it "Melrose", and left it to his daughter, Mary Seltzer. For much of the early twentieth century, it was the home of Circuit Court Judge Joseph C. Mattingly, who built the two flanking wings in the 1920's. After Mattingly's death, the property was sold to a developer, who laid out the subdivision of Southlawn, reserving the largest lot for the old house. Today this imposing house is framed by large oak trees which give a hint of its historic setting, and, although surrounded by subdivision housing, is an important and unusual landmark.

Acreage: 40,839 square feet.

The Sheriff-Mattingly house is an imposing three-part brick structure, presently surrounded by the small lots of a 1950's subdivision just outside the Capital Beltway near Oxon Hill. The central block is a two-and-one-half-story gable-roofed building (ca. 30 feet square) with principal facade to the north. (Two flanking two-story wings have been attached during this century.) Entrance is in the central (but off-center) bay of the three-bay north facade, through a panelled door with seven-pane transom and three-pane sidelights. The doorway is surmounted by a flat arch, as are the window openings. Across the north facade runs a one-story porch, supported by four Tuscan columns, built early in this century. Ghosts of earlier pilasters are visible on each side of the door.

The walls of the house are laid in common bond: one header to five stretchers. Windows on the first story are 9/6, and 6/6 on the second; they are double hung sash, but only the lower sash is movable. There are louvered shutters at the windows in the north (main) facade. The boxed cornice is returned at the gable ends. Two projecting courses of brick corbelling provide a decorative border below the cornice. There is an interior chimney at each of the east and west gable ends, to the rear (south) of the ridge.

In plan, the central (original) block is divided into four asymmetrical sections, the two larger spaces being on the west side. Only the two rear (south) parlors have fireplaces; both mantels are replacements. A third mantel has been placed against the west wall of the entry-hall (northeast space), creating a false fireplace. The fourth section is composed of staircase and utility space (now a bathroom). The stair rises to the north, then turns west over the entrance doorway, covering a small triangle of the door space. The stair has a handsome turned newel post, and plain balusters, square in section. The architrave trim of doors and windows has cyma reversa molding.

The roof structure of this main block is formed from hand-hewn rafters, joined in barefaced tenon. There is no ridgeboard. Midway along the rafters are tie-beams joined to the rafters by dovetail halving.

The east (kitchen and dining) wing was built in 1920, and replaces the original one-story kitchen wing. The west (sitting-room) wing was built new in 1929. In both wings, bricks were selected to match the color and size of those in the main block, and care was taken to reproduce the corbelled brick cornice.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Sheriff-Mattingly house is very significant in that it is one of only a handful of late-Federal brick plantation homes surviving in Prince George's County. All that remains of its original setting is a nearly-one-acre lot, surrounded by the small lots of a 1950's subdivision known as Southlawn.

The farm in which this dwelling stands has been known by many names through its history: Hart Park, then part of Oxon Hill Manor (which incorporated several other tracts in addition to Hart Park), and Melrose.¹ Construction details strongly suggest that the central block of the house was built in the 1830's or 1840's, during the ownership of Ann Talbott; she and her children had received 99 acres of Oxon Hill Manor (Hart Park) as a gift from her uncle. In 1853, Ann Talbott and her children sold the house and approximately sixty acres to Alfred Thomas Sheriff, and it became the Sheriff family home from then until his death in 1897. (It was during Sheriff's tenure that the home place was known as "Melrose".) After Sheriff's death, the house and 18 acres passed to his daughter, Mary Sheriff Seltzer, who referred to her farm home by its oldest name, Hart Park.²

In 1918, the old house was purchased by the Mattingly family and became the home of Circuit Court Judge Joseph C. Mattingly until his death in 1948. Judge Mattingly bought up adjoining lands, thus creating a working farm of ca. 250 acres. In 1920 he built the new (east) kitchen wing on the foundations of an earlier kitchen. In 1929 he added a balancing (but unequal) sitting-room wing on the west, resulting in a large and imposing three-part house. In the construction of the wings, Mattingly reused bricks from historic structures, and took care to reproduce the corbelled cornice of the main block.³

In the late 1950's, the subdivision of Southlawn was built around the Sheriff house, and just short of an acre was retained around the house as the largest of the residential lots. The house is located ca. 200 feet in from the road and is only partially visible from it, framed by several large oaks. There are two modern storage buildings in the yard behind the house.

After Judge Mattingly's death, his heirs sold the property to a developer, who laid out the subdivision of Southlawn, reserving the largest lot for the old house.⁴ Today, this imposing house is framed by large oak trees, giving a hint of its historic setting, and, although surrounded by subdivision housing, is an important and unusual landmark.

The house is a two story brick structure with a three bay main (north) facade. It is laid up in common bond throughout. The central doorway has transom and sidelights. The cornice, returning into the gable ends, is boxed. The flush gable end chimneys are positioned to the south of the roof ridge. Windows are double hung sash, 9/6 on the first floor and 6/6 on the second, with modern mullions.

Lower two story wings have been added on either end. The one to the east dates about twenty years after the main block; the one to the west is 20th century.

A one story porch with columns has been added across the main facade.
