

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #78-14a Building Date: 1820's

Building Name: Keokuk

Location: 4101 Ritchie-Marlboro Road, Upper Marlboro, Maryland

Private/Residence/Occupied/Excellent/Inaccessible

Description:

Keokuk is a two-story frame plantation house, set back southwest of Ritchie-Marlboro Road, at one of the highest points on a tract of rolling farmland. The main block is five bays by two bays, one-room deep, with central passageway and two flanking parlors. Entrance is in the central bay of the five bay main (east) facade. Windows are 2/2 double hung sash, and have black louvered shutters. There is an exterior brick chimney with weatherings at the north gable end, and an interior chimney at the ridge near the south gable end. The roof of this main section is covered with slate, and the building is sheathed with aluminum siding. There is a one-bay-deep addition on the west facade, and a two-story two-bay-deep kitchen wing attached at the south gable end. Keokuk is a complete farm establishment, and has many outbuildings; the most interesting is the small frame slave quarters located a short distance southwest of the main house. South and east of this building are several small twentieth century sheds, and to the west of the complex are several tobacco barns.

Significance:

Keokuk is an excellent example of an early nineteenth century vernacular farmhouse, one-room-deep, with central stairhall and flanking parlors. The main block of the house was probably standing in its original form by the 1820's when the large plantation was the home of Eleanor Berry. In 1869 the plantation was acquired by that extensive landowner, Thomas Clagett of Weston, who bought up for members of his large family much of the farmland west of Upper Marlboro. Thomas Clagett, one of the grandsons of Thomas Clagett of Weston, left Maryland in 1850 and settled in Keokuk, Iowa. When he returned to Prince George's County after the Civil War, his grandfather purchased for him the 630-acre farm which had been the home of Eleanor Berry. Upon resettling in Prince George's County, Thomas Clagett named his new farm "Keokuk", and henceforth referred to himself as "Thomas Clagett of Iowa." After taking possession of the house Clagett undertook repairs and alterations, including the rebuilding of the kitchen wing, and the construction of the westerly addition. Thomas Clagett of Iowa farmed "Keokuk" until his death in 1910; it remains to this day in the possession of the Clagett family. The house stands as the center of a working farm; together with its outbuildings, dating from both the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, it makes up a complete farmstead in one of the most beautiful and historic agricultural areas of Prince George's County.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Keokuk is a two-story frame plantation house, constructed in several sections. It is set back ca. one-third mile southwest of Ritchie-Marlboro Road, at one of the highest points on a large tract of gently rolling farmland. The main block is five bays by two bays, one-room deep, with central passageway and two flanking parlors. The floors of this section are composed of whole logs, planed and levelled on top to form the floor surfaces. Entrance is in the central bay of the five bay main (east) facade, through a door which has two-pane sidelights and a rectangular transom sectioned in rays. Its surround includes dentilled frieze and bullseye corner blocks. There is no porch. Windows, which were originally 6/6 double hung sash, have been altered to 2/2, and have black louvered shutters. Foundations are of brick. There is one exterior brick chimney with weatherings at the north gable end, and an interior chimney at the ridge near the south gable end. The roof of this main section is covered with slate, and the building has recently been sheathed with aluminum siding.

There is a one-bay-deep addition on the west facade which increases to three bays the depth of the entire main block: it includes a cross gable section on the north, perpendicular to the main block, with two bays in its west gable end, and a three-bay section continuing across to the south. This five-bay addition has a more gently sloping roofline (covered with asphalt shingle) than that of the main block. There is a small, partly-enclosed shed-roof porch sheltering the second and third bays.

Extending three more bays to the south is a two-story two-bay-deep kitchen wing. It is sheathed with aluminum siding; the roof is covered with asphalt shingle which replaces wood shingle. Across the west facade is a one-story shed roof porch supported by turned posts. There is an interior chimney at the ridge at the south gable end. As in the main block, the foundations are of brick.

Keokuk is a complete farm establishment, and has many outbuildings. The most interesting is the small frame slave quarters located a short distance southwest of the main house. It is two bays by one bay, with entrance in the second bay of its east facade. There is an exterior chimney west of the ridge at its south gable end. The building is covered with plain board siding, and rests on brick foundations. South and east of this building are several small twentieth century sheds. To the west of the complex are several tobacco barns.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Keokuk is an excellent example of an early nineteenth century vernacular farmhouse, one-room-deep, with central stairhall and flanking parlors.¹ It is the nucleus of a complete farm establishment, thus exemplifying an ante-bellum plantation.

The main block of the house was probably standing in its original form by the 1820's when Benjamin Berry deeded the large plantation (parts of four tracts) to his widowed daughter-in-law. Eleanor Berry soon lost the plantation, however, and it became the home for thirty years of the Beall family.² In 1869 the plantation was acquired by that extensive landowner, Thomas Clagett of Weston, who bought up for members of his large family much of the farmland west of Upper Marlboro.

Judge Thomas William Clagett, one of the sons of Thomas Clagett of Weston, left Maryland in 1850 and settled in Keokuk, Iowa. His son, Thomas, who as a teenager had accompanied him to the west, decided to return to Prince George's County after the Civil War, and requested that a farm be purchased for him. Accordingly, his grandfather, Thomas Clagett of Weston (82A-7) and his uncle, Charles Clagett of The Cottage (78-18), purchased the 630-acre farm which had been the home of Eleanor Berry and later William Z. Beall. They sold the southern half of it to their young kinsman, who returned from Iowa in 1869.³ (The northern half went to one of the sons of Charles Clagett, and is known today as Ingleside, #78-14b.) Upon resettling in Prince George's County, Thomas Clagett named his new farm "Keokuk", and, to distinguish himself from relatives of the same name, henceforth referred to himself as "Thomas Clagett of Iowa." After taking possession of the house in 1869, Clagett undertook repairs and alterations, including the rebuilding of the south kitchen wing, and the construction of the westerly addition. Further repairs in 1903 (by the Wyvill brothers, local builders) included new siding and roof, and a porch across the east facade.⁴

Thomas Clagett of Iowa farmed "Keokuk" until his death in 1910, and the farm passed to one of his sons. It remains to this day in the possession of the Clagett family. The house stands as the center of a working farm; together with its outbuildings, dating from both the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, it makes up a complete farmstead in one of the most beautiful and historic agricultural areas of Prince George's County.
