HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #82A-39 Building Date: 1850's

Building Name: Mount Clare (Charles Branch)

Location: 6606 Woodyard Road, Upper Marlboro, Maryland

Private/Residence/Occupied/Excellent/Inaccessible

Description

Mount Clare (Charles Branch) is a two-and-one-half story frame dwelling house which stands on a knoll overlooking the old road between Mellwood and the Woodyard. The main block is side gabled, three bays by one bay, with entrance in the central bay of the principal north facade. The double door is sheltered by a one-story flat-roof entry porch, supported by square posts with solid jigsaw brackets. Windows are grouped in pairs, long narrow 4/4 double hung sashes, with molded lintels, plain board sills and black louvered shutters. Above the entry porch at third level, the principal north facade is highlighted by a central crossgable, lighted by a round-arched window. Identical windows light the east and west gable ends. Siding of the main block is of channelled horizontal board on north and west gable, and plain horizontal board on the east and rear elevations. The eaves are supported by solid jigsaw brackets. There are two corbelled brick chimneys at the ridge, flanking the central stairhall. A lower two-and-one-half-story gable-roof kitchen wing extends east from the east gable end.

Significance

Mount Clare (Charles Branch) is an excellent example of an early Victorian I-house with Italianate decorative elements, one of approximately six surviving houses of its type built in Prince George's County in the third quarter of the nineteenth century. Mount Clare was built in the mid 1850's for Richard Oden Mullikin on part of the Woodyard estate. It followed the standard I-house form, but was distinguished by a few Italianate decorative details: overhanging eaves punctuated by boldly profiled cornice brackets, paired windows with molded lintels, and round-arch windows lighting the central crossgable and the gable ends. Mullikin's 284-acre plantation came to be known as Charles Branch, after the Western Branch tributary of that name which flowed through the property. Mullikin's fortune declined after the Civil War; in 1876 the Charles Branch farm was sold to John Binger. The Binger family undertook several improvements in the early years of their residence. A kitchen wing was built onto the east gable end of the house; the east parlor was enlarged and divided, and a projecting semi-octagonal bay was added. This enlarged dwelling remained the Binger family home for three generations. In 1961 the house and 12 acres were sold to the present owners, who renamed the farm Mount Clare. It is a visible landmark atop the highest point of land along Woodyard Road. Mount Clare is one of only a few remaining highstyle I-house dwellings of the third quarter of the nineteenth century in Prince George's County.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Mount Clare (Charles Branch) is a two-and-one-half story frame dwelling house which stands on a knoll overlooking the old road between Mellwood and the Woodyard. It is distinguished by its prominent site, its expanded I-house design, and the jigsaw brackets which decorate its cornice.

The house consists of a main block with an attached lower kitchen wing. The main block is side gabled, three bays by one bay, with entrance in the central bay of the principal north facade. The entrance is through a double door with molded panels. Each leaf of the door has a round-arched upper panel and an octagonal lower panel; each panel shows evidence of change from original round arch and rectangle. The door enframingent has plain board with molded backband, and a molded lintel enclosing a three-light transom. The entrance is sheltered by a one-story flat-roof entry porch, supported by square posts with molded capitals and solid jigsaw brackets. The porch rests on stone piers; it has a molded modillion cornice, and flat jigsaw balusters form a second-story balustrade around the flat roof.

Windows are grouped in pairs, long narrow 4/4 double hung sashes; they have board surrounds with molded lintels, plain board sills and black louvered shutters. Above the entry porch at third level, the principal north facade is highlighted by a central crossgable, lighted by a four-pane round-arched window. Identical round-arched windows light the loft level at the east and west gable ends.

Siding of the main block is of channelled horizontal board on the north front and west gable end, and plain horizontal board on the rear elevation and east gable end, all painted white. Cornerboards are beaded. The eaves have a deep overhang, and are supported by solid jigsaw brackets of two types, the more ornate decorating the raking cornices of the north crossgable and the gable ends. The gable roof is covered with black asbestos shingle; there are two corbelled brick chimneys at the ridge, flanking the central stairhall. The building rests on a high brick foundation, which enclosed a shallow cellar. This cellar space was excavated an additional two feet in the 1960's, and finished. There is a one-story flat-roof porch across the south rear facade; the deck above it is bounded by a plain rail balustrade, and continues east above a one-story semi-octagonal projecting bay in the third (eastmost) bay.

A lower two-and-one-half-story gable-roof kitchen wing extends east from the east gable end, inset on both sides. It is one bay by one bay, with a crossgable pantry space on the south. Entry to the kitchen wing is through a one story hip-roof corner porch at the southeast corner.

Interior plan of the main block consists of central stairhall with flanking parlors, an I-house plan. The two-run open-string staircase rises along the east wall of the stairhall, turns 90° at a landing, and turns again 90° to the second story. There is a heavy turned walnut newel with mitred cap, turned balusters, and bracketed stairends. Floor boards are pine, of random widths. Door and windows surrounds throughout the main block are boldly profiled with cyma reversa and astragal moldings. The baseboards are plain two-step board, to which an ogee crown molding was added in the 1960's. The large formal parlor on the west has a fireplace centered in its interior wall; it is adorned with a handsome black marble mantel, with arched opening, incised decoration, and central cartouche. The space east of the stairhall is divided into two smaller rooms. The plain wooden mantel was removed in the 1960's from the interior wall of the northerly space, and replaced by a new mantel. The rear (southeasternly) space was enlarged in the 1870's by the addition of the projecting semi-octagonal bay, accessible by a structural-arch opening cut into the (original) south exterior wall.

Mount Clare stands on a knoll in a grove of trees, with landscaped garden on the north, and paddocks on the other three sides bounded by white rail fences. There is small modern garage structure southeast of the house, within the fence line. Farther east, on an unpaved drive, is a large gable-roof barn. Originally built as a tobacco barn, it has been converted for the stabling of horses and storage of hay; it was constructed with hand-hewn beams and pegs, and now has vertical siding and a corrugated metal roof. Entrance is in its west gable end. Immediately north of the barn is a gable-roof implement shed, now expanded by a shed-roof wing to the south.

West of the house, where the entrance lane leads east from the Woodyard road, is an older tobacco barn with vertical siding and corrugated metal roof.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Mount Clare (Charles Branch) is an excellent example of an early Victorian I-house with Italianate decorative elements, later enlarged and embellished with typical Victorian features. It is one of approximately six surviving houses of its type built in Prince George's County in the third quarter of the nineteenth century.

Mount Clare was built in the mid 1850's for Richard Oden Mullikin at approximately the time of his marriage. Mullikin was the grandson of Benjamin Oden of Bellefields, who in 1825 had purchased 877 acres of The Woodyard out of the estate of Revolutionary War merchant Stephen West (his father-in-law).¹ When Oden died in 1836, he devised the Woodyard property to his son-in-law, William Duckett Bowie, in trust for his daughter, Sophia Oden Mullikin, and her heirs.² Sophia Oden Mullikin died in 1851, and her son, Richard Oden Mullikin, brought suit against his uncle (William Duckett Bowie) to carry out the provisions of his grandfather's will.³ Accordingly, in July 1853, Charles Clagett was appointed trustee, and sold to Richard O. Mullikin 284 acres of the Woodyard; Mullikin married soon after this, and built the subject house on the property.⁴ It followed the standard I-house form, but was distinguished by a few Italianate decorative details: overhanging eaves punctuated by boldly profiled cornice brackets, paired windows with molded lintels, and round-arch windows lighting the central crossgable and the gable ends.

Richard O. Mullikin was a planter who, with his family, moved in the same social circles with the Clagetts and Bowies, and other wealthy land-owners of the Marlboro area. His 284-acre plantation came to be known as Charles Branch, after the Western Branch tributary of that name which flowed through the property. It is not certain exactly when the house was completed. The land was unimproved at the time Mullikin acquired it in 1853, but certainly the Mullikins were living in the completed Charles Branch plantation house by early 1858 at the time of the death of their infant son.⁵

As with most planters, Mullikin's fortune declined after the Civil War, and in 1875 he and his wife sold the Charles Branch farm to their brother-in-law, Charles Clagett of The Cottage; Clagett sold the farm to John and Frederick Binger, and for two more generations it was known locally as the Binger Farm.⁶

The Binger family undertook several improvements in the early years of their residence. A kitchen wing was built onto the east gable end of the house (the original kitchen was probably at basement level under the northeast space; a fireplace in this basement space is now closed). The east parlor was enlarged, and a projecting semi-octagonal bay was added on its south (rear) wall; this enlarged space was then divided into two adjoining rooms. The present north entry porch was probably added at the beginning of this century. This enlarged dwelling remained the Binger family home for three generations.

In 1961 the house and 12 acres were sold to the present owners, who renamed the farm Mount Clare. Since that time they have made a few minor alterations, e.g. removal and replacement of the east parlor mantel, and the excavation and finishing of the basement rooms. The house retains its distinctive features, however, and is a visible landmark atop the highest point of land along Woodyard Road. It is one of only a few remaining high-style I-house dwellings of the third quarter of the nineteenth century; similar buildings are Ashland (#79-11) built just after the Civil War, and the McLeod-Forrester House (#61-11) and the James Hamilton House (#74B-7) both from the 1870's. Another close parallel is Navajo (#78-22), built in the late 1870's by carpenter John C. Wyvill for Charles Clagett, brother-in-law of Richard O. Mullikin, as a home for Clagett's son, William Baruch Clagett. Navajo shares many features with Mount Clare: central cross-gable with round-arch window, cornice brackets, and paired windows. Unlike Mount Clare, however, Navajo is two rooms deep (i.e., it has a Georgian rather than an I-house plan), and its principal entrance has full enframing with transom and sidelights; Navajo's kitchen wing, contemporary with the main block, forms a rear ell and is not visible from the front as Mount Clare's is.⁷ Still, the principal facade of Navajo is very similar to that of Mount Clare, and it is likely that Clagett suggested his brother-in-law's house as a model for carpenter Wyvill; Clagett was the legal owner of Mount Clare in 1875. Because of their outstanding siting and resulting visibility, Mount Clare and Navajo are the most prominent examples of this type of dwelling in Prince George's County.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The house is a two story, frame structure with a three bay, main (north) facade. The central doorway has a four light transom; the flanking double windows are 4/4 double hung sash. There is a central gable with a semi-circular arched window. The eaves are bracketed. Over the windows are heavy cornices. There is a small porch with bracketed posts and a flat roof with jig-saw work balustrade. Large chimneys rise along either sidewall of the central hall.

At the east end is a lower, two story wing of two bays. It has an internal end chimney.

In plan, the house has a central hall and flanking parlors. The staircase with Italianate newel post, rises along the east wall of the hall. The fireplace in the main parlor is marble.

There are several barns standing on the property.
