

resources related to exceptional events or categories of resources so fragile that survivors of any age are unusual. While it is true that few examples of roadside architecture from this period remain in the study area, NPS Bulletin 15 instructs that "Properties that by their nature can last more than fifty years cannot be considered exceptionally important because of the fragility of the class of resources" (p. 42). Based on this interpretation and given the fact that these resources are not associated with an exceptional event and can last more than fifty years, the district fails to meet Criteria Consideration G. Thus, this district is not eligible for the National Register.

Visible from MD 210 and occupying a commercial wedge somewhat awkwardly isolated when Bryan Point Road was cut off from the intersection, the B & J Carryout Dixie Style Bar-B-Q and Sisko Auto Repair represent good examples of purpose-built roadside architecture from the 1950s.

Originally constructed circa 1953, the B & J Carryout Dixie Style Bar-B-Q is, by popular account, a local institution. Located at 15805 Livingston Road, this single story brick, glass, and block building is garishly painted purple, red, white, and yellow, and adorned with striped metal awnings. Lighting fixtures, road-signs, and signs affixed to the structure convey the building's association to the past. Polygonal in shape, the facade is composed of a bay consisting of a wide central section featuring a picture window, and two shorter angled walls providing entrances into the building. A walk-up "Take Out" window is located on the south side of the structure (along Accokeek Road), with picnic tables supporting white and red striped umbrellas set up in summer for outside dining. Inside, a counter runs the width of the building with limited customer service room. Behind the counter, a window leads into the kitchen, and a long corridor stretches back to storage, refrigeration units, and an office. In front of the building, a small parking area sets the establishment back from MD 210. Originally, a concrete pad extended from the center of the structure and cars parked on both sides, with service provided from roller skating waitstaff. Today the property is smaller, and the restaurant provides only carry-out or outside seating.

A parking lot separates the B & J Carryout from the Sisko Auto Repair and service station located across the dead-end street at 201 Bryan Point Road. Built in 1956, the sleek lines of this single story parged concrete block structure are emphasized by white paint with blue accent stripes, the use of plate glass, and a clipped corner providing an interesting angle to the otherwise straightforward form. The station has three garage bays, three pumps, men's and women's restrooms, and a glass-encased walk-in service area. Like the B & J, signage and light fixtures convey the historicity of the time period.

At the north end of the building, a typical two story brick commercial facade adjoins the service station. This undistinguished blockish mass has a pent roof supported by turned wood posts, and displays modern double hung and sliding windows, with a wood planter serving as a parapet in front of the structure.

The suburbanization of this corridor of Prince George's County intensified after the 1930s with improved access to the area following the construction of MD 210. During this period, increased automobile traffic shuttled people from expanding federal facilities in the county to burgeoning suburban developments, and facilitated travel to Washington and Baltimore. Dependence on the automobile required facilities to service cars, and fostered the growth of roadside conveniences and amusements. Thus, the establishment of a drive-in restaurant and service station were natural occurrences in the 1950s. Historic mapping indicates that drive-in theaters also previously existed along MD 210.

Examples of roadside architecture from this time period have been diminished by the onslaught of modern strip development. The B & J Carryout and Sisko Auto Repair typify the earliest of such purpose-built commercial ventures, and when considered with Hovermale's, a previously identified ice cream stand on Livingston Road, reinforce the influence of the automobile in the study area. The proximity of the Potomac and the historic presence of amusements near the study area, such as the Riverview Amusement Park also indicate seasonal tourism that encouraged warm-weather venues such as Hovermale's and the B & J.

Originally a small beige and brown structure called "Our Drive-In," a gravel concrete strip provided a curb for cars to pull in and receive curb service. Briefly called Pat's Carry Out, the restaurant assumed its current name in 1962 when Julian Hardesty assumed ownership of the business with his partner Bill, calling their place the "B & J." The real estate remained in the ownership of John Dyer, a local businessman. In 1977, Dyer assumed ownership of the business as well, and it remained in his hands until purchased by the present owners, Phil and Susan Jones, in 1991. When they purchased the restaurant, it was painted green with brown and white awnings. The Coca-cola signs on the building have historically adorned the structure.
